EDITORIAL NOTE.

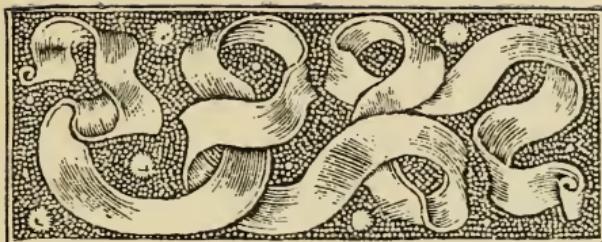

THE Committee of the Religious Tract Society have undertaken the issue of the famous theological treatises included in this Series in the hope that they will be widely read and studied, not only by professed students, but also by the thoughtful general readers of the present day.

Each treatise is complete in itself, and, as far as possible, gives the full text exactly as it came from the pen of the author, even when adherence to this principle involves variation in bulk and price, and the occasional retention of a few passages not fully in accord with the general teaching of the Society. The reader, as a rule, will easily discover these, and will not fail to see their importance in illustrating the weakness, as well as the strength, of the Christian opinion of other days. Care is taken to note such passages where there appears to be need for so doing.

E R R A T U M.

The note which appears at the end of the Confession, p. 51, should stand at the end of St. Patrick's Hymn in the Ancient Irish. It was the Dublin MS. of that Hymn which was kindly collated for me by Rev. Professor Abbott, D.Litt., Trinity College, Dublin.

VI. THE ANCIENT IRISH HYMN IN THE ORIGINAL IRISH, WITH A TRANSLATION INTO MODERN IRISH, BY THE LATE REV. PROFESSOR GOODMAN, M.A.	150

Introduction.

HE present edition of the writings of St. Patrick is an attempt to bring out in English the works of that great man, with the necessary addition of historical and critical notes, but with the omission, as far as possible, of all matter which has been made the subject of religious controversy. In the earlier editions of this work, which were issued nominally under the joint editorship of Rev. G. T. Stokes, D.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Dublin, and myself, a special attempt was indeed made to avoid touching upon every point likely to arouse controversy. It was hoped that an impartial edition of Patrick's works without controversial notes or comments might have been useful and acceptable to Irishmen of various creeds and opinions, as well as to English Christians, who, in general, know little of the great Apostle of Ireland.*

The utter impossibility of publishing in Ireland any work of the kind which would be regarded with equal favour by Roman Catholics and Protestants was abundantly proved in this case. An eminent Irish scholar, a Roman Catholic priest, who died some time after the publication of the earlier editions, was asked to join with me as co-editor of the work, in order to secure its impartiality. He, however, stated that he could not approve of publishing St. Patrick's writings without theological notes, and that he would require to be permitted to point out that even the occasional use by Patrick of the term sacerdos (priest) to indicate a Christian minister was sufficient to prove that St. Patrick believed in the Roman Catholic doctrine of 'the sacrifice of the mass.' Of course under such conditions it was impossible to accept his services. The Irish Catholic, a Dublin Roman Catholic weekly journal, in a review of the work after its publication, similarly maintained that the omission in the work of any discussion of the question whether Patrick received a commission from Rome or not was simply ‘the suppression of everything in the shape of argument on the Catholic side !’ The work, however, was, on publication, warmly commended by a Roman Catholic prelate in Ireland, but he declined to permit his commendation to be published.

* These expectations were not wholly unfulfilled. Four thousand copies of an 8vo. edition in pica type, published at sixpence sewn, and one shilling in cloth, were disposed of in a little more than eighteen months. This in itself must be regarded as a very creditable fact. But the price at which the work had been issued was unremunerative, and although a sum of £30 was subscribed in answer to an appeal by the Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance, that sum was wholly insufficient to print successive editions of the work, and to meet other necessary expenses. Hence the work was offered to the Religious Tract Society, and accepted by that Society for publication in their 'Christian Classics' Series.

There is no allusion whatever in St. Patrick’s writings to his having received any commission from the Pope. If, therefore, he did receive a commission from Rome—a point on which no trustworthy evidence can be adduced—the silence of Patrick on the subject would prove that he attached no such importance to such a commission as his mediæval biographers were disposed to affirm. But, as Dr. Stokes has well pointed out, in his work on Ireland and the Celtic Church (p. 51), the question is, from a Protestant stand-point, of little importance, and if the evidence brought forward in favour of the Roman claim were strong enough we should have no hesitation whatever in admitting the point.

Those who are interested in such investigations can easily consult for themselves the arguments brought forward on the subject in Professor G. T. Stokes’ work, and dwelt upon with more fulness of detail in Dr. Todd’s St. Patrick, the Apostle of Ireland. It is, therefore, unnecessary here to enter upon that thorny subject of discussion. It may be, however, noted in passing, that the first of ‘the sayings of Patrick’ preserved in the Book of Armagh, and given in the present volume among the doubtful remains of the saint, alludes to the fact of Patrick’s having visited Italy.

There is nothing, however, to show where those Dicta came from, and therefore they cannot be regarded as conclusive evidence. It is, however, quite true that St. Patrick's autobiography, as set forth in his Confession, passes over in silence the events of many years.

In the present work the Latin term sacerdos has been invariably translated 'priest,' presbyterus has been rendered 'presbyter,' and clerici 'clergy.' In some of the Roman Catholic editions the latter term has been translated 'priests.'

It must be observed that early Celtic Christianity was very different in its external form from the Christianity of modern times, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant. Many usages which were afterwards distinct features of the Celtic Church of Ireland, and which appear to have been the growth of later days, are not alluded to in Patrick's writings. St. Patrick's writings are indeed brief and scanty, but are clear enough on the essential points of Christian doctrine. No such exaggerated views on the celibacy of the clergy were held by Patrick as were afterwards prevalent, for he mentions without scruple the fact that both his father and grandfather were clergymen. On the other hand, he speaks with approval of monks and virgins, which were not in his days recluses like those described in Professor G. T. Stokes' ninth lecture. Patrick also quotes passages of the Old Testament apocryphal books which he evidently viewed as inspired Scripture. In spite of all these drawbacks, as Protestants must regard them, the writings of the saint are in the main strongly evangelical, and cannot fail to be perused by all Christians with both pleasure and profit.

In the present edition we have divided the ‘remains’ of Patrick into two divisions; the first containing the writings which are probably genuine, the second a few remains of interest which are of doubtful genuineness, but which are, notwithstanding, of considerable interest, and not generally known.

The genuine writings are three in number, namely, Patrick’s Hymn, his Confession, and his Epistle to Coroticus. The doubtful remains are (1) the Dicta Patricii, contained in folio 9, a 1, of the Book of Armagh. Their rustic Latinity is some evidence in their favour, though not absolutely conclusive. (2) The Proverbs of Patrick are also of doubtful authorship. There are some strong points in their favour, but it is impossible now to test the statement of the monk Jocelin that they were translated from Irish into Latin. (3) The interview of Patrick with the daughters of King Loegaire, if not certainly a Patrician document, possesses marks of high antiquity. (4) Patrick’s Vision of Ireland’s Future stands in such marked contrast with the fables in which it is imbedded that it is worth preserving, though not likely to have been authentic. (5) We have added to this edition the remarkable Confession found at Angers, but probably belonging originally to Tours, to which we have appended introductory remarks.

There are other works ascribed to Patrick which, however, have been shown to be spurious by competent scholars. These are to be found in Patrick's Opuscula, edited by Ware* and Villanueva.† No scholar, however, who has read even a few lines of the tract De Tribus Habitaculis, Of the Three Habitations (or the World, Heaven, and Hell), could believe St. Patrick to have been its author, so different in all respects is its Latin style from that exhibited in the genuine Confessio and Coroticus. The same may be said of the tract De abusionibus Seculi, and of others. Some, if not all, of the Canons attributed to Patrick are decidedly productions of a later age. None of them, in the form in which they have come down to us, are earlier than the eighth century. See Dr. Todd's St. Patrick, pp. 485 ff., and Dr. W. Stokes in the Tripartite Life, as also the article by Professor G. T. Stokes, in Smith and Wace's Diet. of Christian Biography.

St. Patrick's Irish Hymn is of great antiquity, although, as Dr. Todd says, 'it may be difficult, if not impossible, to adduce proof in support of the tradition that Patrick was its author.' The Irish hymn is distinctly mentioned in Tirechán's Collections, that is, in the middle of the seventh century.‡ It is a composition of † Sancti Patricii, Iberorum Apostoli. Synodi, Canones, Opuscula et Scriptorum qui supersunt Fragmenta: scholiis illustr. a Joachimo Laurentio Villanueva, Presbyt. Dublini apud R. Gräisberry, 1835.

‡ Tirechán is said to have written his Collections of matters connected with St. Patrick 'from the lips or book' of Ultan (died 656), whose pupil he was. This Ultan was (A.D. 652) considerable force and beauty, written at a time when Paganism was almost supreme in Ireland. The author shared in the general belief of the day that even heathen sorcerers had mysterious powers by which they could work harm to their opponents. The expressions used in the Hymn correspond with the circumstances under which Patrick set out on his missionary visit to Tara to confront in its own stronghold the idolatry which was then rampant in the land.* The very expression ‘Creator of doom’ in reference to God which occurs twice in the Hymn is evidence in favour of its Patrician authorship. For, according to the Tripartite Life, which embodies some fragments of antiquity, ‘my God’s doom,’

Bishop of Clonard, which in later times formed part of the diocese of Meath. The Collections of Tirechán form part of the miscellaneous matter contained in the MS. known as the Book of Armagh. According to Tirechán, four special honours were to be paid to him in all the monasteries and churches of Ireland.
1. The festival of St. Patrick’s death, though in Lent (March 17), was to be celebrated by three days’ festivities, during which all kinds of good food and flesh meat might lawfully be partaken of.
2. There a special mass was to be offered up in his honour on that day (offerторium ejus proprium in eodem die immolari). 3. The hymn of Secundinus, written in honour of St. Patrick, was to be sung during the whole time. 4. At all times of the year they were to sing Patrick’s Irish hymn (canticum ejus scoticum semper canere). See Dr. Whitley Stokes, Tripartite Life of St. Patrick,

p. 333.

* It was on this occasion that St. Patrick is related, in the later legend, to have illustrated the doctrine of the Trinity by the three leaves united into one in the shamrock. Dr. Fowler, in his edition of Adamnan’s Life of S. Columba (p. xxxiii.), observes on the latter point: ‘The use of the trefoil as an emblem in Ireland is very ancient, but probably of pagan origin. None of the early or mediæval Lives, however, connect it with St. Patrick, and the legend seems not to be found earlier than A.D. 1600. It is not mentioned by Colgan, who wrote in 1647.’

or ‘the doom’ and ‘judgment of my God,’ appears to have been one of Patrick’s favourite expressions, to which he constantly gave utterance. It is noteworthy, too, that whereas, according to the later legends, Patrick was conscious of possessing extraordinary powers of performing miracles—miracles greater than those performed by the Apostles of Christ—Patrick, in his Hymn, in full anticipation of the dangers which surrounded him, relied on no such powers, but speaks of the protecting hand of that God who has ever been a refuge and strength to His people (Psa. xlvi.). It cannot be denied that even the two earliest memoirs of the saint contained in the Book of Armagh, which MS. was written itself in A.D. 807 (see p. 20), namely, the memoir by Muirchu Maccu-Machthéni, and that by Tirechán, written scarcely later than two centuries after Patrick’s death, speak of marvellous displays of miraculous power (see p. 16). No such references to miraculous agency can, however, be detected in the poem, and it is therefore probable that it is of a considerably earlier date than those memoirs.

The Hymn in the original is written in a very ancient dialect of Irish, and hence the meaning of some words and phrases is somewhat uncertain. It is one of those compositions termed by the Latin name of Lorica, or ‘breastplate,’ the repetition of which was supposed to guard a traveller like a breastplate from spiritual foes. This popular belief is alluded to in the Irish preface, which will be found in note 1 on the Hymn. The translation of the Hymn in our first edition was taken from that set forth by Dr. Todd in his St. Patrick, pp. 426-9.* The translation there given was mainly the work of Whitley Stokes, and was a great advance upon the earliest version given by Dr. Petrie (see notes on Hymn at the end of book). The translation in the present work is in the main the improved version of Dr. Whitley Stokes. The alterations made in the older translation are all noted, and the grounds for them set forth in the critical notes. There are two MSS. of the Hymn, one in the Liber Hymnorum in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, the other in the Bodleian copy of the Tripartite Life. The Hymn of Patrick has been set to music as a sacred cantata by the late Sir Robert Stewart, Professor of Music in the University of Dublin, and was performed for the first time in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1888. See remarks on Mrs. Alexander's Version, p. 110.

In the present edition we have given the hymn in the ancient Irish from the MS. in Trinity College, Dublin, accompanied by a translation of it into the modern Irish language. The latter translation has been made by the late Rev. James Goodman, M.A., Professor of Irish in the University of Dublin, one of whose last acts was to revise the proof-sheet of that translation.

The other works of Patrick acknowledged to be genuine are the Confession and the Epistle to Coroticus. The evidence in favour of the authenticity of those documents is, as curtly stated by Dr. Whitley Stokes, five-fold. Rolls Tripartite, p. xciii. (1) The mention of decurions. See Coroticus, § 5, and note, p. 145. (2) The use of the plural word Brittanniæ, or Britains. See Confession, § 10, and note 6, p. 134. (3) The Biblical quotations are made in both documents from an ante-Hieronymian version of the Bible. (4) The Confession speaks of a married clergy; and (5) the Latin style used in both documents is very similar to that found in the writings of Gregory of Tours, who was a missionary from Ireland. See p. 24. In addition to these five points, it may be added that (6) the references to the events of the age correspond with facts known from other sources. (See Professor G. T. Stokes' notes on the Confession, chap. i. pp. 125, 126; chap. ii. p. 131; and on Coroticus, pp. 143, 144; &c.) Moreover (7), the utter absence of any references to miracles in both writings (although miracles abound, as already noticed, in all the later biographies) is additional proof that those documents are genuine remains of the Apostle of Ireland.

The utter absence of 'the marvellous' in the Confession and Epistle to Coroticus is the more remarkable when it is borne in mind that the notes on Patrick's life by Muirchu Maccu-Machthéni, which is found in the Book of Armagh, speak of the miracles performed by him at Tara, when contending with the magicians of King Loegaire. Those notes relate the miracle of Patrick's raising Daire's horse to life after it had died on account of trespassing on the ground given by Daire to Patrick at Armagh for religious purposes. They tell of a dead man speaking to Patrick out of his grave ; of an angel who appeared to Patrick, as to Moses, in a burning bush ; and other like wonders. The date of Muirchu is about A.D. 690. The collections of Tirechán, who probably lived about the same date, and are also contained in the Book of Armagh, relate also many miracles. Tirechán distinctly quotes from the Confession.

The Tripartite Life, probably composed in the eleventh century, contains even more marvels ; as does also the later life drawn up by Jocelin, a monk of the twelfth century. According to Jocelin, Patrick was baptized by a blind priest, who obtained the water required for the purpose by causing the infant to make the sign of the cross over the earth, when a well of water gushed forth, which not only cured the priest of his blindness, but enabled him to read the order of baptism ‘without knowing until then his letters.’ Icicles are said to have been transformed by Patrick into faggots, butter changed into honey. The saint was able, like Christ after His resurrection, to pass through shut doors. When his horses were lost on one occasion, ‘St. Patrick raised up his hand ; his five fingers illumined the whole plain as if they were five lamps, and the horses were found at once.' A goat bleated in the stomachs of the men who had eaten it up, and, according to a still later embellishment, came forth alive out of their mouths. When a tooth fell out of Patrick's head as he was crossing a river, the tooth shone in the ford like a sun ; and on another occasion Coroticus, the king of the Britons, was changed by him into a fox. The man Victoricus, whom St. Patrick relates he saw in a dream (p. 57), is transformed in the later legends into his guardian angel Victor !

In opposition to all such marvels, the autobiography contained in the Confession, and the statements made in the Epistle to Coroticus, are distinguished by a sobriety of narration which in itself goes far to prove their genuineness. Not even the legend-loving scribes of a later age have dared to interpolate those writings with their absurd wonders.

Among the various works which contain translations of these writings of Patrick, Miss Cusack's Life of St. Patrick * is of special interest, as the ablest and largest work on the subject written from a Roman Catholic standpoint. Miss Cusack has left the Church of Rome since these lines were originally penned. The peculiar importance of her work in connection with the Remains of Patrick consists in the fact that it contains (pp. 369–502) the Tripartite Life of Saint Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, translated from the original Irish by W. M. Hennessy, Esq., M.R.I.A. Mr. Hennessy gives the Latin text of the Confession and Epistle to Coroticus, as well as an English translation of both, with some critical notes. Mr. Hennessy's death, which occurred in January, 1889, has removed from our midst one long known as a distinguished Irish scholar. He occupied the position of Deputy-Keeper of the Records, Ireland, and was favourably known by his learned edition of the Chronicon Scotorum, in the Rolls series.

An earlier translation into English of the Confession of St. Patrick, written from a Roman Catholic standpoint, is that by Archdeacon Hamilton, printed and published by John C. O'Reilly, 139, Capel Street, Dublin, in 1859. Archdeacon Hamilton was at that time Roman Catholic parish priest of St. Michan's, Dublin. We have frequently referred to this translation in the notes appended to the present work.

The most important work on the subject of the Patrician writings is unquestionably the Rolls edition of the Tripartite Life, and other documents relating to Patrick, by Dr Whitley Stokes.* It contains among other matters a translation of the Hymn with the original Irish, and the Latin text of the Confession, from the Book of Armagh and the Cottonian MS., with the Dicta Patricii. The Epistle to Coroticus,

* The Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, with other Documents relating to that Saint. Edited with Translations and Indexes by Whitley Stokes, D.C.L., LL.D., Hon. Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford. Parts I. and II. London. Published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, by Eyre and Spottiswoode. 1887.

which is not contained in the Book of Armagh, is given here from the Cottonian MS.

The Latin text of the Confession, as found in the Book of Armagh, and in the Bodleian MS. Fell. 1, has also been published in Gilbert's (John, F.S.A., M.R.I.A.) splendid work, Fac-similes of the National MSS. of Ireland, Part II. London. 1878. Published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls. Another critical edition of the Latin Confession with various readings is contained in Haddan and Stubbs' Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents, vol. ii. part ii. These works have not, however, generally speaking, been consulted in the preparation of the present volume, as Dr. Whitley Stokes' work rendered that examination unnecessary.

The Book of Armagh has been proved by Bishop Graves, of Limerick, from internal evidence to have been written A.D. 807. The very name of the scribe has been recovered.* That codex is in itself a veritable miscellany. It contains, as already mentioned, two early memoirs of Patrick, the Dieta Patricii, notes on various subjects, the so-called Liber Angeli, relating to the See of Armagh, the Confessio of Patrick, Jerome's Preface to the Gospels, the Books of the New Testament in full, with the apocryphal Epistle to the Laodiceans; and a life of Martin, with dialogues and Epistles of the saint, &c. The Confessio found in that codex was transcribed from a MS. said to have been in Patrick's own hand, and which certainly was difficult to read from age, for the copyist mentions that fact several times.* It now forms part of the treasures of the Library of Trinity College, Dublin. The copy of this MS. used by Mr. Hennessy was executed by Rev. Thaddeus O'Mahony, D.D., Professor of Irish in the University of Dublin from 1861 to 1879. The text of the Confession in the Book of Armagh is considerably shorter than that presented in other MSS. Sir Samuel Ferguson is, however, most probably correct in maintaining that 'that transcript [the Book of Armagh] bears many internal evidences of an abridgment'; and there is nothing in the more copious matter of the other copies necessarily at variance with it, so far as it has come down to us. Mr. Olden, whose work will be found mentioned on p. 23, has given substantial reasons to show that the copyist of the Armagh MS., which was compiled with the object of exalting the dignity of Armagh, intentionally omitted passages in the Confession, which the scribe supposed to be inconsistent with the particular object he had in view. It is sad to think that the earliest MS. labours under such suspicion. The portions of the text added from other MSS. have been supplied within square brackets [] in the present work.

* See his paper in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, III. pp. 316-324, and Whitley Stokes, Rolls Tripartite, p. xc.

Four other MSS. of the Confession are known to be in existence, namely, the Cottonian MS. in the British Museum, and two Fell MSS. in the Bodleian Library. These three MSS. are assigned by Whitley Stokes to the eleventh century. The text, however, contained in the folio volume of the Acta Sanctorum, published by the Bollandist Fathers (Antwerp, 1668), was taken from a MS. which was supposed by Nicholson to have perished in the troublous times of the French Revolution. That MS. has, however, as the late Bishop of Down and Connor (Dr. Reeves) informed me, been discovered near its old locality, the Monastery of Vedastin or Saint Waast, near Arras, in the North of France, and is now preserved in the Public Library of Arras. (See also the Rolls Tripartite, p. xciii.) The Latin texts given by R. Steele Nicholson in his work on Patrick* are those of the Cottonian MS. and the Bollandist text.

The text followed in the present edition is substantially that given by Mr. Hennessy and Dr. Whitley Stokes. It has been, however, occasionally verified by reference to the Book of Armagh, and has been constantly compared with the other texts. The selection of various readings given in the notes has been generally taken from Mr. Hennessy's edition, or from that of Dr. Whitley Stokes.

The following recent English translations of

* St. Patrick: Apostle of Ireland in the Third Century; The story of his mission by Pope Celestine in A.D. 431, and of his connection with the Church of Rome proved to be a mere fiction : with an Appendix containing his Confession and Epistle to Coroticus translated into English. Mr. Nicholson's hypothesis that Patrick lived in the third century is incidentally disproved by several of the historical points noticed by Professor G. T. Stokes in his notes.

the Latin texts have been compared in drawing up the revised translation here given—(1) The translation of Mr. Hennessy contained in Miss Cusack's work ; (2) The translation of the Confession by Archdeacon Hamilton, noted on p. 17 ; (3) That of the Rev. Thomas Olden ; * (4) That by A. F. Owing to his long-continued separation from civilised life, and his constant use of the Irish language, the Latin of St. Patrick's writings is bad and ungrammatical. His style is also often broken, and occasionally obscure. This has created no little difficulty, and consequently all translators of his works have taken more or less liberties in their endeavours to present to their readers a readable English translation. A translator who desires to be peculiarly faithful is sometimes embarrassed in an attempt to translate such an author. In revising the English translation for our edition, it has been sometimes necessary to replace smooth English by English of more questionable correctness and taste. The ruggedness in some places of our revised translation has been caused by the desire above all things to be faithful. Had our author expressed himself in grammatical Latin, we should not have been satisfied with rugged English. But the case is wholly altered when one has to deal with works written in indifferent Latin, and which it is desirable to translate as faithfully as possible. In his attempt to be faithful, the late Mr. Hennessy frequently left himself open to the same criticism.

The rude and ungrammatical character of Patrick's Latin writings is a strong evidence of their genuineness. New evidence, already alluded to, has recently come to light indirectly bearing on this point. A splendid edition of the works of Gregory of Tours has lately been published (1883-1885), edited by Arndt, Bonnet, and Br. Krusch, in the Monumenta Germaniae Historica, giving for the first time the nearest approach to the genuine text of that Father. The Latin of Gregory is very similar to that found in Patrick's writings. Like the latter, it is semi-barbarous in grammar and spelling. But it is exactly the Latin which would be expected from a Celt educated in Gaul.

Patrick's quotations from Holy Scripture also cause some difficulty. It is probable that he often quoted from memory, and consequently not with verbal accuracy. And yet, after making all due allowance for this probability, we have considered it necessary to carefully examine his quotations from Scripture, and to compare them with the commonly received text of the Latin Vulgate and the older Latin version used by the early Latin Fathers, as edited by Sabatier, and designated generally as ‘the Itala.’ When the Latin text of Patrick’s quotations agrees with the Vulgate, we have, as a matter of simple fair play, given the English text of the Douay Bible, so called because the Old Testament was published at Douay in 1600, the New Testament having been previously brought out at Rheims in 1582. As the Douay Bible is an accredited English translation of the Latin Vulgate, we have followed that Version, even in cases where we might as well (and possibly with better literary taste), have substituted the rendering of the Authorised Version as identical in meaning and more classical in style. But in cases where Patrick’s quotations differ verbally from the Latin Vulgate the difference has been expressed in our translation. Patrick’s Biblical quotations were made from a Latin Version earlier than that of Jerome. More might be said on this head if the ancient Irish Version of the New Testament in the Latin language, which forms the main portion of the Book of Armagh, had been published. Scholars are aware that a good commencement has been made in the way of editing texts of portions of Latin translations prior to that of Jerome. But the materials are not yet at hand to enable anything satisfactory to be done in the way of identifying the translation used by Patrick. Owing to the few references made to the Gospels in Patrick's Works, a comparison of his quotations of the Gospels with Professor Abbott's *Evangeliorum Versio Antehieronymiana yielded no result.

The division of the Confession into chapters and sections has been in the main adopted from the Bollandist edition. No such division is found in the Book of Armagh. The contents affixed to each chapter are, of course, our own. Words supplied to complete the sense have been as far as possible included in ordinary brackets (). The meaning of the square brackets [] has been already explained on page 21.

Professor G. T. Stokes contributed to the former edition certain notes of his own, which reappear in the present edition with his name attached to them. His numerous occupations prevented him from taking more than a nominal part in the editing of the former work, and hence it was more satisfactory for me to assume the responsibility of the sole editorship of this edition.

Notwithstanding the ruggedness of style of Patrick's Latin works, and their want of accordance with grammatical rules, there is much to be commended in the simplicity and unadorned dignity of his narrative. The modesty and humility exhibited by him in the account given of the marvellous success of his mission is most remarkable. There is, moreover, in his writings a display of genuine missionary spirit, which, as it has roused many a Christian worker to action in the past, may well stir up many in our day also. Patrick everywhere displays an earnest trust and faith in the constant protection of a gracious Providence. His love for the souls of the men among whom he laboured, notwithstanding the ill-treatment he received at their hands, is remarkable. His honest simplicity and the contempt everywhere displayed for the riches of the world deserve far more general recognition than they have yet received. His acquaintance with the Holy Scripture, with the phraseology of which his Writings are thoroughly imbued, and his desire to conform his doctrine to their teaching, are significant.* To him God and

* It may be interesting as a proof of Patrick's love for the Scriptures to call attention to the remarkable reliquary known as the Domnach-airgid, or 'the silver shrine' which enclosed a copy of the Four Gospels in Latin, presented, according to the Tripartite Life, by Patrick to Aedh MacCarthenn of Clogher. The shrine and the manuscript it contained (which long belonged to the Monastery of Clones) are now among the most prized treasures of the Royal Irish Academy. The MS. is unfortunately for the most part a solid opaque mass; portions of it, however, are still legible. It is highly probable that it was the veritable copy used by Patrick himself during his devotions. The 'shrine' is described by Dr. Petrie in vol. xviii. of the

Satan, heaven and hell, were great realities ; ‘he endured as seeing Him who is invisible’ (Heb. xi. 27). Like Ignatius and many others, Patrick coveted earnestly to attain the crown of martyrdom. His ‘Creed’ is clear and terse. A simple unaffected piety, wholly devoid of ostentation, breathes in every paragraph of his writings. He ‘walked by faith,’ and therefore his works were done in love. His writings ought to be dear to all lovers of the Gospel of Christ, to whatsoever creed they may severally belong. If we differ occasionally from his opinions, we learn at least to recognise that there is much precious truth held in common by those who do not think alike on all points of religion. There is a rugged eloquence in the Epistle to Coroticus which should come home to the hearts of all who read that stirring and manly rebuke administered by the Irish Apostle. It is, therefore, earnestly to be hoped that the present edition of Patrick’s Works may find its way into many Irish homes, and tend to endear the name of Patrick still more to all the people of Ireland. Not only Irishmen, but English and Scotchmen also, may read with pleasure and profit these short, but precious relics of a bygone age. Patrick’s Works ought to be prized and valued by all those who delight in such devotional writings as The Confessions of Augustine or The Imitation of Christ of Thomas à Kempis. Much food will be found for the devotional life in the simple ‘remains’ of the Apostle of Ireland. May the study of the life and words of the humble disciple lead many to study still more deeply the life and teachings of the great Master Himself, whose words, recorded in the Gospels, ‘are spirit and are life !’ (John vi. 63.)

Brief Sketch of the Life of St. Patrick.

T. PATRICK was probably born at Dumbarton (see p. 125) about A.D. 373 (Rolls Tripartite, p. cxxxvii.). His missionary work in Ireland does not seem to have begun until some time after A.D. 432 or 439. Prosper of Aquitaine, an intimate friend of Pope Celestine, flourished in the first half of the fifth century, and wrote a chronicle which extends to A.D. 455. In the older editions of that work the chronicle extended only to 433, but continuations of it have been discovered later. Prosper does not speak of the mission of St. Patrick the Apostle of Ireland, but mentions the mission of Palladius to Ireland in A.D. 431. This is recorded in the following terms : ‘Palladius, ordained by Pope Celestine, is sent to the Scots believing in Christ (ad Scotos in Christum credentes) as first bishop.’ These Scots were Irish (see Prof. G. T.

Stokes, note 23, p. 139). The mission of Palladius proved unsuccessful, and Palladius himself died shortly after. As Palladius was well known to ancient Irish writers as the senior Patrick, it is possible that his mission was in later times confused with the more successful work of the so-called Apostle of Ireland. Prosper was probably dead ere the work of the latter evangelist was accomplished.

The language used by Prosper shows plainly that both he and Pope Celestine were of opinion that Christians in Ireland existed at that early period. In later times, however, attempts were made to conceal that fact. Hence, when the Irish historian Nennius in 858 issued his edition of the Historia Britonum, compiled probably in 822 (see Rolls Tripartite, p. cxvii., and extracts, p. 498), that writer corrects Prosper's language into 'the Scots to be converted to Christ' (ad Scottos in Christum convertendos), and in afterwards speaking of St. Patrick's mission, which Nennius relates as undertaken at the suggestion also of Pope Celestine, a similar expression is made use of, namely, ad Scottos in fidem Christi convertendos mittitur, 'he is sent to the Scots to be converted into the faith of Christ.'

St. Patrick, as his name indicates, most probably sprang from a Roman family which had settled in 'the Britains' (see note 2, p. 123, and note 6, p. 134). According to the Tripartite Life his mother's name was Concessa, a sister or relation of St. Martin of Tours (Rolls Tripl., p. 8). The same statement is made by the earlier writer Muirchu (Rolls Tripl., p. 494), and probably by St. Patrick himself (see note 3, p. 124). She appears also to have been of Roman origin. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather appear all to have been clergymen (see note 4, p. 124), clerical celibacy not being enforced in those days. Patrick was carried off captive from his native land when sixteen years old, during one of the piratical descents of the Irish on the coasts of the Britains (see note 8, p. 126). He was then a stranger to true religion (see p. 47), which fact is elsewhere several times referred to (see note 9, p. 126). Muirchu, one of his earliest biographers, gives the same account. The later legends, which speak of Patrick's early piety and of miracles performed by him in his infancy and childhood, had not then come into existence.

The autobiography set forth in his Confession (chaps. i. and ii.) gives all that is really known about his early life, and concerning his captivity in Ireland, during which dark season of affliction he was brought to know the Lord (p. 47). There is, however, no mention made in the Confession of the place in which he was trained for the ministry, or of his ordination. That he was 'a deacon' at one time of his life, and was made a bishop at another, is there mentioned (pp. 58, 73). Patrick confesses, however, his lack of learning and of training for the ministry; and though he was by nature a man of considerable intellectual gifts, his writings confirm his own statements with respect to the want of early education (see pp. 49, 67).

There are, however, considerable gaps in this autobiography. When we consider the pride he took in his noble birth, the high estimation in which he held the Roman and Gallic Christians (p. 77), the reference (in the doubtful 'sayings') to the Roman style of chanting (pp. 83, 84), it is certain that if Patrick had received a mission from the Roman See he would have mentioned it.

According to Muirchu he was raised to the episcopate by Amatorex, a bishop in Gaul (Rolls Tripartite, p. 273), and was thus consecrated by a single bishop only (Todd's St. Patrick, p. 318). Certain objections were made on that occasion to his promotion, which are referred to in his Confession (pp. 58, 59).

There is also no allusion whatever to be found to any commission received from Rome in the Hymn composed in honour of his master* during his lifetime by Secundinus, St. Patrick's own pupil. In that hymn Patrick is compared to St. Peter and to St. Paul, and is said to be sent by God like St. Paul to be an apostle to the Gentiles, and to have been 'advanced by the Saviour for his merits to be a bishop ;' and Secundinus says of Patrick that 'Christ chose him to be his vicar on the earth.' It is impossible to conceive that in such a eulogy the Roman commission could have been passed over had it been actual fact.

Dr. Whitley Stokes observes in reference to that eulogy : 'The internal evidence of the antiquity of this hymn is strong. First, the use of the present tense in describing the saint's actions ; secondly, the absence of all reference to the miracles with which the Tripartite and other Lives are crowded ; and thirdly, the absence of all allusion to the Roman mission, on which many later writers, from Tirechán downwards, insist with such persistency' (Rolls Tripartite, p. cx.).

The hymn ascribed to Fiacc, a contemporary of St. Patrick, although not written by its reputed author (see Rolls Tripartite, p. cxi.), is also silent on the story of the Roman mission.

* The original of Secundinus' Hymn is given in Dr. Whitley Stokes' work, pp. 386-389, with various documents connected therewith. A good English translation with illustrative notes is given in Olden's little work, note in our Introduction, p. 23.

The facts connected with Patrick's life which can be relied on are as follows : Taken captive at sixteen he remained in captivity for about six years with Milchu somewhere in the valley of the Braid. On the hill of Slemish he tended cattle and often poured out prayers to God. He then escaped from his master, and after many perils recorded in his Confessio (§§ 7-9) got back to his parents. It is quite uncertain how he employed the next thirty years or more, the 'many years' alluded to in his first paragraph of chap. iii. p. 56. It is also uncertain what is meant by the second captivity alluded to in the same paragraph. After two months he regained his liberty. The reference in § 10 (second paragraph of chap. iii. p. 56) made to a journey through a desert for twenty-eight days when food failed is suspiciously like that in § 8, p. 54.

'After a few years' Patrick was again in 'the Britains' with his parents. What he had been doing during those years is unknown. But they seem to have been years of hardships. At this time he saw the vision, like that of St. Paul at Troas, which called him to Ireland (p. 57). Dr. Whitley Stokes' conjectures that some of those thirty or more years were employed in unsuccessful attempts to convert the pagan Irish. That, however, is scarcely probable. He may have spent some of those years in wandering in other lands, or among 'the islands of the Tyrrhenian Sea' (as alluded to in the Sayings given on p. 82). Mr. Newell makes the conjecture just alluded to.* But, as Newell remarks, Patrick does not appear to have spent that time in studies as represented by the later legends. He probably got ordination somewhere during that period, and after his vision may have gone to Gaul and received episcopal consecration there, after passing through the painful ordeal alluded to on pp. 58, 59. But neither St. Patrick's own writings nor the Hymn of Secundinus give any account of where he studied or where he travelled.

It should be noticed, however, that there are evident gaps existing in the Confession or autobiography as it has come down to us. Those gaps may be easily detected. The first paragraph of chap. iii. p. 56, comes in awkwardly, however the captivity there mentioned be explained. There is another gap between the two paragraphs of § 11 on p. 58 of our edition. Another gap appears to exist after the first eight lines of § 18 on p. 64, for the story of the Scottic maiden comes in there rather awkwardly. Omissions are, as is admitted, made in quotations from Scripture (see instances given in notes 17 and 19 on p. 138). These facts lead to the conclusion that we have no full account of his life. To attempt to fill up the gaps from later legends, after the specimens given of how simple facts have been distorted, is utterly vain.

Professor Stokes, in his lectures on Ireland and the Celtic Church, has, with great probability, sketched Fowler's (Vice-Principal of Bishop Hatfield's Hall, Durham), Introduction to his valuable work, Adamnævi Vita S. Columbae, edited from Dr. Reeves's text, with an Introduction on early Irish Church History, notes, and a glossary. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press, 1894. Dr. Fowler's notes upon the legend of St. Patrick's driving out the snakes from Ireland, on that of the shamrock (which is not mentioned earlier than A.D. 1600), and in reference to the relics of the saint, such as his bell and crozier, are all interesting.

Patrick's travels in Ireland. Landing at the mouth of the river Vartry where Wicklow now stands, he proceeded along the coast until he reached Strangford Lough, and visited his old master. After some successful missionary expeditions he found it necessary to confront the heathenism and sun-worship of Ireland at the royal capital, then at Tara, on which occasion he composed his Irish hymn. The success which attended that noble endeavour to preach Christ the true Sun of Righteousness to Loegaire (the modern Leary), the supreme king of Ireland, and his court is nowhere alluded to by St. Patrick himself. It has no doubt been vastly exaggerated even in the earliest legends. But the blow then delivered at the centre of Irish heathenism soon bore good fruit, and the poetical beauty and force of the grand hymn composed on that occasion had no doubt much to do with that result. Few details are given by St. Patrick of incidents connected with his missionary labours, and even the earliest records of his successes, such as that of the conversion of the two daughters of King Loegaire (given on p. 90 ff.), are not free from later embellishments. Some idea of the extent of his missionary travels may be gathered from the names of places and from traditions freely scattered over the country, out of which many of the later legends arose. It may be fairly asserted that he travelled over a considerable portion of Ireland, always prudently seeking to commence his work with the conversion of the petty kings and chieftains of the various parts of the country. He adhered manfully to the work he had undertaken amid the difficulties referred to in general terms in chaps. iv. and v., and seems to have endured much persecution, even to bonds and imprisonment, as recorded in the close of § 15, p. 62. One imprisonment, in which he was put in irons, lasted fourteen days (p. 62). That he had to suffer grievous wrongs in the persons of his converts is plain from the Epistle to Coroticus. When he composed his Confessio he was in constant expectation of being reduced to slavery (p. 69), or even laying down his life by a violent death (p. 70). Martyrdom was, however, looked forward to without shrinking. This, however, is sufficient to show that, great as may have been his missionary successes, Ireland was very far from having been transformed in his day into an 'isle of saints.' Hence it should be noted that St. Patrick's Vision of the Future (given on p. 95 ff.), though probably based on some substratum of fact, has no doubt been added to in later days.

Dr. Fowler, in his edition of Adamnan's Life of Columba gives the following interesting remarks in reference to the legend of the expulsion by St. Patrick of serpents and toads from Ireland, which appears first in the life written by Jocelin the monk in the twelfth century. He observes (p. xxxii., note) that 'Ireland has enjoyed an immunity from snakes and some other reptiles from time immemorial. This fact is referred to by Solinus in the third century (Polyhist. xxii.), by Bede in the eighth (Ecclesiastical Hist. i. 1), and by many other writers. The subject is fully discussed, with catenæ of quotations from earlier writers, in Messingham, Florileg, Insulae S. S. (1624), pp. 127-134, and in Colgan, Tr. Th. p. 255.'

Dr. Fowler also has given much important information on the eastern origin of Irish Christianity, to which we would refer the curious reader, for the subject is too large to be entered into here. It has also been discussed by Professor G. T. Stokes in his ninth lecture on Ireland and the Celtic Church.

Although the writings of St. Patrick are in the main highly evangelical, it is not strange that Patrick should have imbibed some of the errors which had crept everywhere into the Church of the fifth century. He evidently held ‘higher’ views with respect to baptism and the Lord’s Supper than are set forth in Holy Scripture, while his notions concerning the power committed to the clergy (Coroticus, § 3, see our note, p. 144) is certainly objectionable. We are not at the least surprised that a theologian of his age, unacquainted with Hebrew, and knowing only the Scriptures through the medium of some of the old Latin versions, which were based on the old Greek translation, should refer to books of the Apocrypha as inspired Scripture. Though unmarried himself, he has expressed no opinion against a married clergy, and his ancestors for several generations belonged to the clerical ranks. The monks and virgins of his day were not shut up within prison walls like those of a later age. There is no trace in his writings of prayers for the dead, of a belief in a purgatory, of any invocation of saints (see Confession, § 9, p. 55, and notes thereon) or of angels, no cultus of the Blessed Virgin, no allusion to any such doctrines as those of transubstantiation, the veneration of sacred images, or so forth. His creed, as set forth in the Confession (§ 2, p. 47), is clear and simple. The Confession of Tours (see p. 99 ff.), which, if not from his pen, is from that of a pupil of his school, is clear and distinct on the points of absolution, confession to God, and the sole Priesthood of Christ. The Holy Scriptures were ever his sole rule of faith, and the doctrines of grace (though those doctrines were then beginning to be sadly obscured in the Church of the fifth century), are set forth ever and again with humble earnestness.

Hence, though we cannot follow him as a master, perusal of his writings cannot fail to be beneficial to all Christians, and especially to the people of Ireland.

In conclusion of our short memoir of St. Patrick, it may be interesting to append the following Latin hymn in honour of St. Patrick which is found on folio 32 of the Irish MS., Liber Hymnorum, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin. It has been printed (with the exception of the last verse) in Colgan's Trias Thaum., and, I believe, somewhere by Father Hogan. But it is not, however, among the pieces contained in Dr. Whitley Stokes' collection in the second volume of his great work, and Rev. F. E. Warren has again called attention to it in the Academy of October 20, 1894. Professor Abbott, of Trinity College, Dublin, has kindly revised it for our purposes. It is interesting, as showing that the author of this very ancient poem was aware of St. Patrick's having been born in Britain, and that he was sent by God to Ireland. It will be noted that no mention is made of any commission received from the Bishop of Rome. We give the poem as in the MS., appending a literal English translation :—

'INCIPIT YMNUIS SANCTI PATRICII.'

'Ecce fulget clarissima patricii sollempnitas.
In qua carne deposita felix transcendit sidera.
Qui mox a pueritia diuina plenus gratia
uitam cepit diligere dignitatis angelicæ.
Hic felici prosapia natus est in brittania, perceptoque baptismate studet ad alta tendere.
Sed futurorum prescius clemens et rector dominus hunc direxit apostolum hiberniae ad populum.'

Erat namque haec insola bonis terrae fructifera.
Sed cultore idolatra mergebatur ad infima.
Ad hanc doctor egregius adueniens patricius predicabat gentilibus quod tenebat operibus.
Confluebat gentilitas ad eius sancta monita.
et respuens diabulum colebat regem omnium.
Gandebatque se liberam remeare ad patriam qua serpentis astutia ollim expulsa fuerat.
Qua propter, dilectissimi huius in laude presulis.
psallamus christo cordibus alternantes et uocibus.
Ut illius suffragio liberati a uitio.
perfruamur in gloria uisione angelica.
Laus patri sit, et filio, cum spiritu paraclito.
qui suae dono gratiae misertus est hiberniae.
Amen.

TRANSLATION.

'(Here) begins the hymn (in honour) of Saint Patrick.'

' Lo ! there shines the most illustrious celebration of St. Patrick !
On which he, happy, having laid aside the flesh,
passed beyond the stars.
Who, full of Divine grace, even from boyhood, began to love the life of angelic dignity.
He was born in Britain of a noble family, and having received baptism, he strove to aim at high things.
But the Lord, conscious of the future, merciful, and ruler,
directed this apostle to the people of Ireland.
For this island was fruitful in the good things of the earth
but by its idolatrous worship it was sinking to the lowest.

The illustrious doctor, Patrick, coming to this (island), preached to the Gentiles that which he kept by his works.

The nation flocked to his holy admonitions, and, rejecting the Devil, worshipped the King of all.

And he rejoiced to return himself to a free country,
from whence the guile of the serpent had been formerly expelled.

Wherefore, dearly beloved, in praise of this leader,
Let us sing to Christ in alternate songs with hearts and voices.

That, freed by his prayers from vice,
We may enjoy the angelic vision in glory.

Praise be to the Father, and the Son, with the Spirit the Comforter,
Who with the gift of his grace pitied Ireland.

Amen.'

II.—THE CONFESSION OF PATRICK.

THE BEGINNING OF THE BOOKS OF SAINT PATRICK,
BISHOP.¹

CHAPTER I.

*Patrick's birth and parentage—Patrick a Briton—His captivity—
The cause of his writing a desire to praise God for His benefits —His creed—His modesty, and want of learning—Raised up by God to do His work.*

PATRICK,² a sinner, the rudest and the least of all the faithful, and most contemptible to very many, had for my father Calpornius, a deacon, a son of Potitus³ a presbyter,⁴ who dwelt in the village of Bannavem⁵ Taberniæ,⁶ for he had a small farm⁷ hard by the place where I was taken captive.⁸ I was then nearly sixteen years of age. I did not know the true God ;⁹ and I was taken to Ireland in captivity with so many thousand men, in accordance with our deserts, because we departed from God, and we kept not His precepts, and were not obedient to our priests,¹⁰ who admonished us for our salvation.

And the Lord brought down upon us ‘the wrath of His indignation,’*¹¹ and dispersed us among many nations,¹² even to the end of the earth, where now my littleness¹³ is seen among foreigners. And there the Lord opened (to me) the sense of my unbelief,¹⁴ that, though late, I might remember my sins, and that I might return with¹⁵ my whole heart to the Lord my God, who had respect to my humiliation, and pitied my youth and ignorance,¹⁶ and took care of me before I knew Him, and before I had wisdom, or could discern between good and evil ; and protected¹⁷ me and comforted me as a father does a son.

2. Wherefore I cannot keep silent—nor is it indeed expedient (to do so)—concerning such great benefits, and such great favour as the Lord has vouchsafed to me in the land of my captivity ; because this is our recompense (to Him) that after our chastening, or knowledge of God, we should exalt and confess His wonderful works †¹⁸ before every nation which is under the whole heaven.

Because there is no other God, neither ever was, neither before, nor shall be hereafter, except God the Father, unbegotten,¹⁹ without beginning. From whom is all beginning ; upholding all things, as we say ; and His Son Jesus Christ, whom indeed with the Father, we testify to have always been, before the origin of the world, spiritually with the Father ;

in an inexplicable²⁰ manner begotten before all beginning; and by Himself were made the things visible and invisible;²¹ made man; (and), death having been vanquished, received into the heavens to the Father.*²² And He has given to Him all power ‘above every name of those that are in heaven, on earth, and under the earth,’²³ that every tongue should confess† to Him²⁴ that Jesus Christ is Lord and God, in whom we believe, and expect (His) coming, to be ere long; ‘the Judge of the living and of the dead,’‡ ‘who will render to every one according to his deeds.’§²⁵ And He hath ‘poured upon us abundantly’|| the Holy Spirit, a gift and pledge of immortality;²⁶ who makes the faithful and obedient to become ‘sons of God,’²⁷ and joint-heirs with Christ’; ¶ whom we confess and adore —one God in the Holy Trinity of the sacred name.²⁸

For He Himself has said by the prophet, ‘Call upon Me in the day of thy tribulation, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt magnify Me.’²⁹ And again He saith, ‘It is honourable to reveal and confess the works of God.’††³⁰

3. Although I am in many respects imperfect, I wish my brethren and acquaintances to know my disposition,³¹ and that they may be able to comprehend the wish of my soul. I am not ignorant of the testimony of my Lord, who witnesses in the Psalm, ‘Thou shalt destroy those that speak a lie.’‡‡³² And again, ‘The mouth that believeth killeth the soul.’ §§³³ And the same Lord says in the Gospel,³³ ‘The idle word that men shall speak, they shall render an account for it in the day of judgment.*³⁴ Therefore, I ought earnestly with fear and trembling to dread this sentence in that day when no one shall be able to withdraw himself, or to hide, but when we all together shall render account of even the smallest of our sins before the tribunal of the Lord Christ.³⁵

Wherefore, I thought of writing long ago, but hesitated even till now; because I feared falling into the tongue of men;³⁶ because I have not learned like others who have drunk in, in the best manner, both law and sacred literature in both ways equally;³⁷ and have never changed their language from infancy, but have always added more to its perfection. For my language and speech is translated into a foreign tongue.³⁸

4. As can be easily proved from the drivel³⁹ of my writing—how I have been instructed and learned in diction;⁴⁰ because the wise man says: ‘For by the tongue is discerned understanding and knowledge, and the teaching of truth.’†⁴¹ But what avails an excuse [although] according to truth, especially when accompanied with presumption?⁴² Since indeed I myself, now in my old age, strive after what I did not learn in my youth, because they prevented⁴³ me from learning thoroughly that which I had read through before. But who believes me, although I should say as I have already said? When a youth, nay almost a boy in words,⁴⁴ I was taken captive, before I knew what I ought to seek, or what I ought to aim at,⁴⁵ or what I ought to avoid. Hence I blush to-day, and greatly fear to expose my unskilfulness, because, not being eloquent,⁴⁶ I cannot express myself with clearness and brevity, nor even as the spirit moves, and the mind and endowed understanding point out.⁴⁷

But if it had been granted to me even as to others, I would not, however, be silent, because of the recompense. And if, perhaps, it appears to some, that I put myself forward in this matter with my ignorance and slower tongue, it is, however, written : ‘Stammering tongues shall learn quickly to speak peace.’*⁴⁸ How much more ought we to aim at this—we who are the ‘epistle of Christ’—for salvation even to the end of the earth,†—and if not eloquent, yet powerful and very strong—written in your hearts ‘not with ink,’ it is testified, . . . ‘but by the Spirit of the living God.’‡⁴⁹

5. And again the Spirit testifies ; ‘and husbandry was ordained by the Most High.’§⁵⁰ Therefore, I, first a rustic, a fugitive, unlearned, indeed, not knowing how to provide for the future—but I know this most certainly, that before I was humbled I was like a stone lying in deep mud ; and He who is mighty came, and in His own mercy raised me, and lifted me up, and placed me on the top of the wall.||⁵¹ And hence I ought loudly to cry out, to return also something to the Lord for His so great benefits, here and in eternity, which (benefits) the mind of men cannot estimate. But, therefore, be ye astonished, both great and small, who fear God. And ye rhetoricians, who do not know the Lord,⁵² hear and examine : Who aroused me, a fool, from the midst of those who appear to be wise, and skilled in the laws, and powerful in speech and in every matter ? And me—who am detested by this world—He has inspired me beyond others (if indeed I be such), but on condition that with fear and reverence, and without complaining, I should faithfully serve⁵³ the nation—to which the love of Christ has transferred me, and given me for my life—if I should be worthy⁵⁴—that, in fine, I should serve them with humility and in truth.⁵⁵

Patrick's desire to recount God's mercies—Employed in feeding cattle—Earnestness in prayer—Promised deliverance in a dream—His escape from slavery—Arrival at the ship—Refused a passage—Betakes himself to prayer—Admitted on board—Desires to convert the sailors—Journey in the desert—Wonderful deliverance from perishing by hunger—Result of prayer—Refuses food offered to idols—Conflict with Satan—Calls on ‘Helias’ for deliverance.

DN the measure,¹ therefore of the faith,* of the Trinity it behoves me to distinguish, without shrinking from danger, to make known the gift of God, and His ‘everlasting consolation,’† and without fear to spread faithfully everywhere the name of God, in order that even after my death I may leave it as a bequest² to my brethren, and to my sons, whom I have baptized in the Lord—so many thousand men. And I was not worthy nor deserving that the Lord should grant this to His servant ; that after going through afflictions and so many difficulties,^{2b} after captivity, after many years, He should grant me so great favour among that nation, which when I was yet in my youth I never hoped for, nor thought of.

But after I had come to Ireland I daily used to feed cattle,³ and I prayed frequently during the day ;⁴ the love of God and the fear of Him increased more and more, and faith became stronger, and the spirit was stirred ; so that in one day I said about a hundred prayers, and in the night nearly the same ; so that I used even to remain in the woods and in the mountain ; before daylight I used to rise to prayer, through snow, through frost, through rain, and felt no harm ; nor was there any slothfulness in me, as I now perceive, because the spirit was then fervent within me.

And there indeed one night, in my sleep, I heard a voice saying to me, ‘Thou fastest well [fasting so], thou shalt soon go to thy country.’ And again, after a very short time, I heard a response saying to me, ‘Behold, thy ship is ready.’⁵ And it was not near, but perhaps two hundred miles away, and I never had been there, nor was I acquainted with any of the men there.

7. After this I took flight, and left the man⁶ with whom I had been six years ;⁷ and I came in the strength of the Lord, who directed my way for good ;⁸ and I feared nothing till I arrived at that ship. And on that same day on which I arrived, the ship moved out of its place, and I asked them (the sailors) that I might go away and sail with them.⁹ And it displeased the captain, and he answered sharply with indignation,¹⁰ ‘Do not by any means seek to go with us.’ And when I heard this, I separated myself from them in order to go to the hut where I lodged. And on the way I began to pray ; and before I had ended my prayer I heard one of them, and he was calling loudly after me, ‘Come quickly, for these men are calling you.’

And immediately I returned to them, and they began to say to me, ‘Come, for we receive you in good faith,¹¹ make friendship with us in whatever way you wish.’ And in that day I accordingly disdained to make friendship with them,¹² on account of the fear of God. But in very deed I hoped of them that they would come into the faith of Jesus Christ, because they were heathen, and on account of this I clave to them.¹³ And we sailed immediately.¹⁴

8. After three days we reached land, and for twenty-eight¹⁵ days we made our journey through a desert. And food failed them, and hunger prevailed over them. And one day the captain began to say to me, ‘What (is it), O Christian? You say thy God is great and almighty; why, therefore, canst thou not pray for us, for we are perishing with hunger?¹⁶ For it will be a difficult matter for us ever again to see any human being.’ But I said to them plainly, ‘Turn with faith¹⁷ to the Lord my God, to whom nothing is impossible, that He may send food this day¹⁸ for us in your path, even till you are satisfied,¹⁹ for it abounds everywhere with Him.’ And God assisting, it so came to pass. Behold, a herd of swine appeared in the path before our eyes, and (my companions) killed many of them, and remained there two nights, much refreshed. And their dogs were filled, for many of them had fainted²⁰ and were left half-dead along the way. And after that they gave the greatest thanks to God, and I was honoured in their eyes.

9. From that day forth they had food in abundance.²¹ They also found wild honey, and offered me a part of it. And one of them said, ‘It has been offered in sacrifice.’ Thanks to God! I consequently tasted none of it.²² But the same night while I was sleeping, and Satan greatly tempted me, in a way which I shall remember as long as I am in this body. And he fell upon me²³ like a huge rock, and I had no power in my limbs, save that²⁴ it came to me, into my mind, that I should call out ‘Helias.’²⁵ And in that moment I saw the sun rise in the heaven ; and while I was crying out ‘Helias’²⁶ with all my might, behold the splendour of that sun fell upon me, and at once removed the weight from me. And I believe I was aided by Christ my Lord, and His Spirit was then crying out for me,²⁷ and I hope likewise that it will be thus in the days of my oppression, as the Lord says in the Gospel, ‘It is not you that speak, but the Spirit of your Father, which speaketh in you.’*²⁸

CHAPTER III.

Second captivity—Deliverance—Return to Britain—Called in a vision of the night to Ireland—The Spirit praying in him—Charge brought against him by his seniors—Cause of the charge—Vision of ‘the writing against him’—The Lord on his side—Inconsistent conduct of a friend—Patrick returns thanks to God—Made a missionary by the grace of Christ.

ND again, after many years, I was taken captive once more.¹ On that first night, therefore, I remained with them. But I heard a Divine response saying to me,² ‘But for two months thou shalt be with them ;’ which accordingly came to pass. On that sixtieth night the Lord delivered me out of their hands.

Even on our journey He provided for us food and fire, and dry weather every day, till on the fourteenth day we all arrived.³ As I stated before, we pursued our journey for twenty-eight days through the desert, and the very night on which we all arrived⁴ we had no food left.⁵

And again, after a few years, I was in the Britains⁶ with my parents, who received me as a son, and earnestly besought me that, now at least, after the many hardships I had endured, I would never leave them again. And there I saw, indeed, in the bosom of the night, a man coming as it were from Ireland, Victoricus by name, with innumerable letters, and he gave one of them to me. And I read the beginning of the letter containing ‘The Voice of the Irish.’ And while I was reading aloud the beginning of the letter, I myself thought indeed in my mind that I heard the voice of those who were near the wood of Foclut,⁷ which is close by the Western Sea. And they cried out thus as if with one voice,⁸ ‘We entreat thee, holy youth, that thou come, and henceforth walk among us.’ And I was deeply moved in heart, and could read no further; and so I awoke. Thanks be to God, that after very many years the Lord granted to them according to their cry!

11. And on another night, I know not, God knows, whether in me, or near me, with most eloquent words which I heard, and could not understand,⁹ except at the end of the speech one spoke as follows, ‘He who gave His life for thee * is He who speaks in thee;’¹⁰ and so I awoke full of joy.¹¹ And again I saw Him praying in me,¹² and He was¹³ as it were within my body, and I heard above me,¹⁴ that is, above the inner man,¹⁵ and there He was praying mightily with groanings. And meanwhile I was stupefied and astonished, and pondered who it could be that was praying in me. But at the end of the prayer He so spoke as if He were the Spirit.¹⁶ And so I awoke, and remembered that the Apostle says, ‘The Spirit helps the infirmities of our prayers. For we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit Himself asketh for us with unspeakable groanings,’†¹⁷ which cannot

* 1 John iii. 16.

† Rom. viii. 26.

be expressed¹⁸ in words. And again, (he says) ‘The Lord is our advocate, and prays for us.’*¹⁹

[And when I was harassed by some of my seniors who came, and (urged) my sins against my laborious episcopate, so that on that day I was strongly driven to fall away, here and for ever. But the Lord spared a proselyte and stranger for His name’s sake. He kindly and mightily aided me in this treading-under, because in the stain and disgrace I did not come out badly. I pray God that it be not reckoned to them as an occasion of sin. For after thirty years they found me, and brought against me a word which I had confessed before I was a deacon.²⁰

12. Under anxiety, with a troubled mind, I told my most intimate friend what I had one day done in my boyhood, nay in one hour; because I was not then used to overcome.²¹ I know not, God knows, whether I was then fifteen years of age; and I did not believe in the one God from my infancy; but I remained in death and unbelief until I was severely chastised; and in truth I have been humbled by hunger and nakedness, and that daily. On the other hand,²² I did not of my own accord go to Ireland until I was almost worn out. But this was rather good for me;²³ for by this I was corrected by the Lord—and He fitted me that I should be to-day what formerly was far from me; that I should be filled with care, and be concerned for the salvation of others; since at that time I did not think even about myself.

Then in that day on which I was reproached for the things above-mentioned;²⁴ on that night,] I saw in a vision of the night, a writing against me,²⁵ without honour. And at the same time I heard a response²⁶ saying to me, ‘We have seen²⁷ with displeasure the face of the designate²⁸ with his name stripped.' He did not say, 'Thou hast seen with displeasure,' but 'We have seen with displeasure,' as if He had joined Himself to me, as He has said, 'He that toucheth you is as he that toucheth the apple of Mine eye.*²⁹ Therefore I give thanks to Him, who comforted me in all things, that He did not hinder me from the journey on which I had resolved, and also from my work which I had learned of Christ my Lord. But the more from that (time) I felt in myself³⁰ no little power, and my faith was approved before God and men.

13. But on this account I boldly assert that my conscience does not reprove me now or for the future.³¹ 'God is my witness'† that I have not lied in those things I have related. [But³² I am the more sorry for my very dear friend—to whom I trusted even my life—that we should have deserved to hear such a response. And I ascertained from several brethren before that defence³³ that, when I was not present, nor in the Britains,³⁴ nor did it originate with me—even he in my absence made a fight for me.³⁵ Even he had said to me with his own mouth, 'Behold, thou art to be promoted to the rank of bishop,'—of which I was not worthy. But whence then did it occur to him afterwards that before all, good and bad, he should publicly put discredit upon me, although he had before of his own accord gladly conceded (that honour to me)? It is the Lord, who is greater than all.

I have said enough. But, however, I ought not to hide the gift of God which He bestowed upon us in the land of my captivity. For then I earnestly sought Him, and there I found Him, and He preserved me from all iniquities, so I believe, because of His Spirit ‘that dwelleth in (me),’* which has wrought in me again boldly^{35b} even to this day. But God knows, if a man had spoken this to me, I might have been silent for the love of Christ.

14. Wherefore, I give unwearied thanks to my God, who has kept me faithful in the day of my temptation ; so that I may to-day confidently offer to Him my soul—to Christ my Lord—as a sacrifice, ‘a living victim ;’ †³⁶ who saved me from all my difficulties, ‡ so that I may say : ‘Who am I, Lord ?’ §³⁷ and what is my vocation,||³⁸ that to me Thou hast co-operated by such Divine grace with me !³⁹ So that to-day I can constantly rejoice among the Gentiles⁴⁰ and magnify ¶⁴¹ Thy name wherever I may be, not only in prosperity, but also in distresses ;  that whatever may happen to me, whether good or evil, I ought to receive it equally, and always to give thanks to God, who has shown me that I should believe in Him, the indubitable one,⁴² without ceasing, and that He will hear me ;⁴³ and that I, though ignorant, may in these last days attempt to approach this work, so pious and so wonderful ; that I may imitate some of those of whom before the Lord long ago predicted (that they) should preach His Gospel, ‘for a testimony to all nations’ ††⁴⁴ before the end of the world. Which, therefore, has been so fulfilled, as we have seen. Behold, we are witnesses that the Gospel has been preached everywhere, in places where there is no man beyond.^{45]}

CHAPTER IV.

Patrick's labours and deliverances—Temptations to remain at home—Willingness to die for Christ—The work accomplished by God's grace—The duty of missionary work—Results of his mission in Ireland—His resolve to continue in the mission-field, and his reliance on God.

BUT it would be long to relate all my labour, in details, or even in part. Briefly, I may tell how the most holy ¹ God often delivered me from slavery, and from twelve dangers ² by which my life was imperilled, besides many snares, and things which I cannot express in words, neither would I give trouble to my readers. But there is God the Author (of all), who knew all things before they came to pass.

[³ So, however, the Divine response very frequently admonished me His poor pupil.⁴ Whence (came) this wisdom to me, which was not in me, I who neither knew the number of my days,^{*5} nor was acquainted with God? Whence (came) to me afterwards the gift so great, so beneficial, to know God, or to love Him, that I should leave country and parents, and many gifts which were offered to me with weeping and tears? And, moreover, I offended against my wish certain of my seniors. But, God overruling, I by no means consented or complied with them. It was not my grace^{*6} but God who conquered in me,⁷ and resisted them all; so that I came to the Irish peoples, to preach the Gospel, and to suffer insults from unbelievers; that I should listen to reproach about my wandering,⁸ and (endure) many persecutions, even to chains; and that I should give up my noble birth⁹ for the benefit of others.

16. And if I be worthy, I am ready to lay down my life unhesitatingly, and most gladly for His name; and there I wish to spend it, even till death, if the Lord permit.]¹⁰

For I am greatly a debtor to the God who has bestowed on me such grace, that many people through me should be born again to God,¹¹ and that everywhere clergy should be ordained for a people newly coming to the faith, whom the Lord took from the ends of the earth, as He had promised of old by His prophets: ‘To Thee the Gentiles will come and say, As our fathers made false idols, and there is no profit in them.’^{†12} And again: ‘I have set Thee to be the light of the Gentiles, that Thou mayest be for salvation unto the utmost part of the earth.’^{†13} And there I am willing to await the promise of Him who never fails, as He promises in the Gospel: ‘They shall come from the east and the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob;’^{§14} as we believe that believers shall come from all the world.¹⁵

17. Therefore it becomes us to fish well and diligently, as the Lord premonishes and teaches,

* 1 Cor. xv. 10.

† Jer. xvi. 19.

§ Matt. viii. 11.

saying : ‘Come ye after Me, and I will make you fishers of men.’* And again He says by the prophets : ‘Behold I send many fishers and hunters, saith the Lord.’†¹⁶ Therefore it is very necessary to spread our nets, so that a copious multitude and crowd may be taken for God, and that everywhere there may be clergy, who shall baptize and exhort a people needy and anxious, as the Lord admonishes and teaches in the Gospel, saying : ‘Going, therefore, teach ye all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you : and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world.’‡¹⁷ And again : ‘Going, therefore, into the whole world, preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned.’§¹⁸ [And again : ‘This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world, for a testimony to all nations, and then shall the consummation come.’]||¹⁹ And also the Lord, foretelling by the prophet, says : ‘And it shall be in the last days, saith the Lord, I will pour out of My Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your sons shall see visions,²⁰ and your old men shall dream dreams. And upon My servants indeed and upon My handmaids I will pour out in those days of My Spirit, and they shall prophesy.’¶ And in Osee He says : ‘I will call that which was not My people My people . . . and her who had not obtained mercy ; and it shall be in the place where it was said, You are not My people, there they shall be called the sons of the living God.'*²¹

18. Whence, then, has it come to pass that in Ireland²² they who never had any knowledge, and until now have only worshipped idols and unclean things, have lately become a people of the Lord, and are called the sons of God? Sons of the Scots²³ and daughters of chieftains are seen to be monks and virgins²⁴ of Christ.²⁵ [And there was even one blessed Scottic maiden, nobly-born, very beautiful, of adult age, whom I baptized. And after a few days she came to us for a reason,²⁶ and intimated to us that she had received a response from a messenger of God,²⁷ and he advised her that she should be a virgin of Christ, and that she should draw near herself to God.²⁸ Thanks be to God! On the sixth day after that, she most excellently and eagerly seized on that²⁹ which also all the virgins of God do; not with the will of their fathers—but they suffer persecution and false reproaches from their parents; and notwithstanding the number increases the more; and of our own race³⁰ who were born there (there are those), we know not the number, besides widows and those who are continent. But those (women) who are detained in slavery especially suffer; in spite of terrors and threats, they have assiduously persevered. But the Lord gave grace to many of my handmaids, for, although they are forbidden, they zealously imitate Him.

19. Wherefore, though I could wish to leave them, and had been most willingly prepared to proceed to the Britains, as to my country and parents; and not that only, but even (to go) as far as to the Gauls, to visit the brethren and to see the face of the saints of my Lord. God knows that I greatly desired it. But I am ‘bound in the Spirit,’* who ‘witnesseth to me,’† that if I should do this, He would hold me guilty ; and I fear to lose the labour which I have commenced ; and not I, but Christ the Lord, who commanded me to come, and be with them for the rest of my life. If the Lord will,‡ and if He will keep me from every evil way,§ ³¹ that I may not sin before Him. But I hope (to do) that which I ought ; but I trust not myself, so long as I am in ‘this body of death ;’|| for strong is he who daily tries to subvert me from the faith,³² and from the chastity of religion proposed (to myself), not feignedly (which I will ‘observe’), even to the end of my life, to Christ my Lord. But the flesh, which is in enmity, ¶ ³³ always leads to death, that is, to unlawful desires to be unlawfully gratified. And I know in part that I have not led a perfect life,³⁴ as other believers. But I confess to my Lord, and I do not blush before Him, because I lie not : from the time that I knew Him in my youth, the love of God and His fear have increased in me ; and until now, by the favour of the Lord, ‘I have kept the faith.’ ³⁵

CHAPTER V.

Patrick's boldness in writing—God's mercy to him in spite of the reproach of men—His desire that others should do more for Christ—His despisal of riches—Did not preach or administer sacraments or orders for gain—His trials in the exercise of his mission—He rejoices in his expenditure and sufferings for Christ—His longing for martyrdom—His belief in the Resurrection—His denunciation of Sun-worship—His final protestation—What he effected was all by God's grace.

LET him who will laugh and insult, I will not be silent, nor will I hide the signs and wonders which were ministered to me by the Lord, many years before they came to pass, as He who knew all things even before the world began.*¹

But hence I ought to give thanks without ceasing to God,† who often pardoned my ignorance (and) my negligence,² even out of place, not in one instance only—so that He was not fiercely angry with me, as being one who was permitted to be His helper. And yet I did not immediately yield to what was pointed out to me, and (to) what the Spirit suggested. And the Lord had pity on me among thousands of thousands,³ because He saw in me that I was ready, but that in my case for these (reasons) I knew not what to do about my position; because many were hindering this mission, and already were talking among themselves, and saying behind my back, ‘Why does that fellow put himself into danger among enemies who know not God?’ Not (as though they spoke) for the sake of malice, but because it was not a wise thing in their opinion, as I myself also testify, on account of my defect in learning.⁴ And I did not readily recognise the grace that was then in me; but now I know that I ought before⁵ [to have been obedient to God calling me].

* Acts xv. 18.

† Comp. 1 Thess. v. 17, 18.

21. Now, therefore, I have related simply, to my brethren and fellow-servants who have believed me, (the reason) why I have preached and do preach, in order to strengthen and confirm your faith. Would that you might aim at greater, and perform mightier things!⁶ This will be my glory, because ‘a wise son is the glory of a father.*⁷

You know, and God also, how I have conducted myself among you from my youth, both in the faith of the truth, and in sincerity of heart.†⁸ Even in the case of those nations among whom I dwell, I have always kept faith with them, and I will keep it.⁹ God knows I have over-reached none of them; neither do I think of it, [that is, of acting thus] on account of God and His Church, lest I should excite persecution against them and us all, and lest through me the name of the Lord should be blasphemed;

* Prov. x. 1; xv. 20.

† 1 Thess. ii. 10.

because it is written, ‘Woe to the man through whom the name of the Lord is blasphemed.’*¹⁰ For though I am unskilful in names,¹¹ yet I have endeavoured in some respects to serve even my Christian brethren, and the virgins of Christ, and religious women, who have given to me small voluntary gifts,¹² and have cast off some of their ornaments upon the altar; and I used to return these to them; although they were offended with me because I did so. But I (did it) for the hope of eternal life, in order to keep myself prudently in everything, so that the unbelieving may not catch me on any pretext, or the ministry of my service; and that, even in the smallest point, I might not give the unbelievers an occasion to defame or depreciate (me).†

22. But perhaps, since I have baptized so many thousand men, I might have expected half a screpall^{12b} from some of them? Tell it to me, and I will restore it to you.‡ Or when the Lord ordained everywhere clergy, through my humble ministry, I dispensed the rite (Lat. ministerium) gratuitously. If I asked of any of them even the price of my shoe, tell it against me, and I will restore you more. I spent for you, that they might receive me; and among you, and everywhere, I travelled for your sake, amid many perils, even to remote places, where there was no one beyond, and where no one else had ever penetrated—to baptize or ordain clergy, or to confirm the people. The Lord granting it, I diligently and most cheerfully, for your salvation, defrayed all things. During this time I gave presents to the kings¹³; besides which I gave pay to their sons who escorted me; and nevertheless they seized me,¹⁴ together with my companions. And on that day they eagerly desired to kill me; but the time had not yet come.* And they seized all things that they found with us, and they also bound me with iron. And on the fourteenth day the Lord set me free from their power; and whatever was ours was restored to us, for God's sake, and the attached friends whom we had before provided.

23. But you know how much I paid to those who acted as judges¹⁵ throughout all the regions which I more frequently visited. For I think that I distributed among them not less than the hire of fifteen men.¹⁶ So that you might enjoy me, and I may always enjoy you in the Lord, I do not regret it, nor is it enough for me—I still ‘spend, and will spend for your souls.’^{17]} God is mighty, and may He grant to me that in future I may spend myself for your souls.¹⁸ Behold, ‘I call God to witness upon my soul’† ‘that I lie not’;‡ neither that you may have occasion, nor because I hope for honour from any man.¹⁹ Sufficient to me is honour which is not belied.²⁰ But I see that now I am exalted by the Lord above measure§²¹ in the present age; and I was not worthy, nor deserving that He should aid me in this; since I know that poverty and calamity suit me better than riches and luxuries. But Christ the Lord was poor for us.||

But I, poor and miserable, even if I wished for riches, yet have them not, ‘neither do I judge my own self;’¶²² because I daily expect either murder, or to be circumvented, or to be reduced to slavery, or mishap of some kind. [But²³ ‘I fear none of these things,’²⁴ on account of the promises of the heavens ; for I have cast myself into the hands of the Omnipotent God, who²⁵ rules everywhere, as saith the prophet, ‘Cast thy thought on the Lord, and He will sustain thee.’*²⁶

24. Behold now, I commend my soul to my most faithful God,† for whom I discharge an embassage in my ignoble condition, because indeed He does not accept the person,‡²⁷ and He chose me to this office, that I might be one of the least of His ministers. But ‘what shall I render Him for all the things that He hath rendered to me ? §²⁸ But what shall I say, or what shall I promise to my Lord ? Because I have no power,²⁹ unless He had given it to me, but He searches ‘the heart and reins ;’|| because I desire enough and too much, and am prepared that He should give me ‘to drink of His cup,’ as He has granted to others that love Him.¶

Wherefore may it never happen to me from my Lord, to lose His people, (people) whom He has gained in the utmost parts of the earth.³⁰ I pray God that He may give me perseverance, and count me worthy to render myself a faithful witness to Him, even till my departure, on account of my God. And if I have ever imitated anything good on account of my God, whom I love, I pray Him to grant me, that with those proselytes and captives, I may pour out my blood for His name’s sake, even although I myself may even be deprived of burial, and my corpse most miserably be torn limb from limb by dogs, or by wild beasts, or that the fowls of heaven should devour it. I believe most certainly that if this should happen to me, I shall have gained both soul and body.³¹

25. For that sun which we behold, at God’s command, rises daily for us—but it shall never reign, nor shall its splendour continue;³⁴ but all even that worship it, miserable beings, shall wretchedly come to punishment.³⁵ But we who believe in and adore the true sun,³⁶ Jesus Christ, who will never perish;³⁷ neither shall he ‘who does His will’—but ‘shall continue for ever,’^{||}—as Christ continues for ever,³⁸ who reigns with God the Father Almighty, and with the Holy Spirit, before the ages, and now, and through all the ages of ages. Amen.

Behold, I will, again and again, declare briefly the words of my Confession. I testify in truth, and in joy of heart, before God and His holy angels, ¶³⁹ that I never had any reason, except the Gospel and its promises, for ever returning to that people from whom I had formerly escaped with difficulty.]⁴⁰

But I beg of those who believe and fear God, whoever shall deign to look into or receive this writing, which Patrick the sinner, unlearned indeed, has written in Ireland, that no one may ever say, if I have done or demonstrated anything according to the will of God,⁴¹ however little, that it was my ignorance (which did it); but judge ye, and let it be most truly believed, that it has been the gift of God. And this is my Confession before I die.

III.—THE EPISTLE TO COROTICUS.¹

PATRICK, a sinner, unlearned, declare indeed that I have been appointed a bishop in Ireland; I most certainly believe that from God I have received what I am. I dwell thus among barbarians,* a proselyte and an exile, on account of the love of God. He is witness that it is so. Not because I desired to pour out anything from my mouth so harsh and severe, but I am compelled, stirred up by zeal for God and for the truth of Christ, for the love of my neighbours and sons, for whom I have abandoned country and parents, and my soul, even unto death, if I be worthy (of such honour). I have vowed to my God to teach the nations, although I be despised by some.

With my own hand I have written and composed these words, to be given and handed to the soldiers, to be sent to Coroticus ;² I do not say, to my fellow-citizens, and to the citizens of the Roman saints, but to the citizens of demons, on account of their own evil deeds, who by hostile practice of barbarians live in death ;³—companions of the Scots and apostate Piets⁴—who stain themselves bloody with the blood of innocent Christians, whom I have begotten without number to God, and have confirmed in Christ.

* Lat. inter barbaras, which must either be corrected into barbaros, as we have done, or the word gentes, nations, supplied, as by Dr. W. Stokes.

2. On the day after that in which (these Christians) were anointed neophytes in white robes, while it (the anointing) was yet glistening on their foreheads—they were cruelly massacred and slaughtered with the sword by those above-mentioned.⁵ And I sent a letter with a holy presbyter, whom I taught from his infancy, with (other) clergy (begging them) that they would restore to us some of the plunder, or of the baptized captives whom they took, (but) they mocked at them. Therefore, I do not know what I should lament for the more, whether those who were slain, or those whom they captured ; or those whom the devil has grievously ensnared with the everlasting pain of Gehenna (hell-fire)—for they will be chained together with him. ‘For’ indeed ‘he who commits sin is a slave,’*⁶ and is termed ‘a son of the devil.’†

3. Wherefore, let every man fearing God know that they (the soldiers) are aliens from me, and from Christ my God, for whom I discharge an embassage,—patricides, fratricides, ‘ravening wolves,’‡ devouring the people of the Lord as the food of bread. §⁷ As he says the ungodly ‘have dissipated Thy law, Lord.’||⁸ Since in these last times Ireland has been most excellently and auspiciously planted and instructed by the favour of God. I do not usurp [other men's labours but]⁹ I have part with those whom He hath called and predestined to preach the Gospel amidst no small persecutions, even to the end of the earth; although the Enemy envies us by the tyranny of Coroticus, who fears not God, nor His priests, whom He hath chosen, and committed to them that greatest, Divine, sublime power: 'Whom they bind upon earth, they are bound also in heaven.'¹⁰

4. I, therefore, earnestly beseech (you), who are holy and humble in heart, not to flatter such persons, nor to take food or drink with them, nor to deem it right to take their alms—until they rigorously do repentance with tears poured forth, and make satisfaction to God, and liberate the servants of God, and the baptized handmaidens of Christ, for whom He was put to death and crucified.

'The Most High reprobates the gifts of the wicked. . . . He that offereth sacrifice of the goods of the poor is as one that sacrificeth the son in the presence of his father.'*¹¹ 'The riches,' he says, 'which he will collect unjustly shall be vomited from his belly, the angel of death shall drag him off, the fury of dragons shall assail him, the tongue of the adder shall slay him, †¹² 'the inextinguishable fire shall devour him.' ‡ And, therefore, 'Woe unto those who fill themselves with things which are not their own.'¹³ Or, 'What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and suffer the loss of his own soul?' §

It were long to discuss (texts) one by one, or to run through the whole law, to select testimonies concerning such cupidity. Avarice is a deadly sin:

‘Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour’s goods.’¹⁴
 ‘Thou shalt not kill.’* A murderer cannot be with Christ. ‘Whosoever hateth his brother is’ termed ‘a murderer.’† Or, ‘He who loveth not his brother abideth in death.’‡¹⁵ How much more guilty is he who has stained his hands with the blood of the sons of God—whom He lately acquired in the ends of the earth by the exhortation of our littleness!§¹⁶

5. Was it indeed without God, or according to the flesh, that I came to Ireland?¹⁷ Who compelled me? I was bound by the Spirit not to see (again) any of my kindred. Do I not love¹⁸ pious compassion, because I act (thus) towards that nation which once took me captive, and laid waste the servants and handmaidens of my father’s house? I was a free-man according to the flesh, I was born of a father who was a Decurio.¹⁹ For I bartered my noble-birth—I do not blush or regret it—for the benefit of others. In fine, I am a servant in Christ, (given over) to a foreign nation, on account of the ineffable glory of that perennial life which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. And if my own friends do not acknowledge me:—‘A prophet hath no honour in his own country.’||

Perhaps (they think) we are not of the one sheep-fold, nor have the one God as Father. As He says: ‘He that is not with Me is against Me; and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth.’¶ It is not fitting that ‘one destroys, another builds.’²⁰ I do not seek those things which are my own.²¹

6. Not my grace, but God, indeed, hath put this desire into my heart, that I should be one of the hunters or fishers, whom of old God promised before in the last days.*²² I am envied. What shall I do, Lord? I am greatly despised. Behold! Thy sheep are torn around me, and are plundered even by the above-mentioned robbers, by the order of Coroticus, with hostile mind. Far from the love of God is the betrayer of the Christians into the hands of Scots and Picts! Ravening wolves have swallowed up the flock of the Lord,† which everywhere in Ireland was increasing with the greatest diligence; and the sons of the Scots and the daughters of princes are monks and virgins of Christ (in numbers) I cannot enumerate. Wherefore the injury done to the righteous will not give thee pleasure (here), nor will it ever give pleasure in the regions below.²³

7. Which of the saints would not dread to be sportive, or to enjoy a feast with such persons? They have filled their houses with the spoil of the Christian dead. They live by rapine, they know not (how) to pity. Poison (they drink), deadly food they hand to their friends and sons. As Eve did not understand that she offered death to her husband, so are all those who do evil—they work out everlasting death and perpetual punishment.

It is the custom of the Roman and Gallic Christians to send holy and suitable men to the Franks,²⁴ and to the other nations,²⁵ with so many thousands of solidi,²⁶ to redeem baptized captives.²⁷ You (Coroticus) so often slay them—and sell them to a foreign nation that knows not God! You surrender members of Christ as into a den of wolves! What hope have you in God? Or he, who either agrees with you, or who uses to you words of flattery?

8. God will judge.²⁸ For it is written, ‘Not only they who do evil, but also, they who consent thereto, are to be condemned.*²⁹ I know not what I can say, or what I can speak further, concerning the departed sons of God, whom the sword has touched beyond measure severely. For it is written, ‘Weep with them that weep,’† and again, ‘If one member suffers, all the members suffer along with it.’‡³⁰ Wherefore, the Church laments and bewails her sons and daughters, whom the sword has not yet slain, but who have been carried to distant parts, and exported into far-off lands, where sin manifestly is shamelessly stronger, [there it impudently dwells and] abounds. There free-born Christian men having been sold are reduced to bondage—(bondage), too, of the most worthless, the vilest, and apostate Piets !

9. Therefore, with sadness and sorrow I will cry out, O my most beautiful and most beloved brethren, and sons whom I begot in Christ—I cannot count you—what shall I do for you ? I am not worthy, before God or men, to help ! The wickedness of the wicked has prevailed against us.§³¹ We are become as strangers.||³² Perhaps they do not believe that we have partaken of one baptism, or that we have one God as Father.¶ To them it is a disgrace that we have been born in Ireland ;³³ as he says : ‘Have ye not one God, why have ye forsaken each his neighbour ?’ ³⁴ Therefore I grieve for you, I do grieve, my most beloved ones. But again, I rejoice within myself, I have not laboured in vain, and my pilgrimage has not been in vain ;³⁵—although a crime so horrid and unspeakable has happened. from this world to Paradise ! I see you have begun to migrate ‘where there shall be no night nor grief, nor death any more,’ *³⁶ but ‘ye shall exult as calves let loose from their bonds, and ye shall tread down the wicked, and they shall be ashes under your feet.’³⁷

10. Ye, therefore, shall reign with the apostles, and prophets, and martyrs, and obtain the eternal kingdom, as He Himself testifies, saying, ‘They shall come from the east and the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.’ † ‘Without are dogs, and sorcerers, and murderer, and liars, and perjurors.’ ‡³⁸ ‘Their part is in the lake of eternal fire.’ §³⁹ Not without reason does the Apostle say : ‘Where the just will scarcely be saved, where shall the sinner, and the impious, and the transgressor of the law find himself?’ ||⁴⁰ For where will Coroticus with his most wicked rebels against Christ, where shall they see themselves ? When baptized women are distributed as rewards⁴¹ on account of a wretched temporal kingdom, which indeed in a moment shall pass away like clouds or smoke, which is dispersed everywhere by the wind ! So sinners and the fraudulent shall perish from the face of the Lord, but the just shall feast with great confidence with Christ ; they shall judge the nations, and shall rule over wicked kings for ever and ever. Amen.

11. I testify before God and His angels that it shall be so, as He has intimated to my ignorance. They are not my words, but those of God and of the Apostles and Prophets, which I have set forth in Latin,⁴²—for they have never lied. ‘He that believeth . . . shall be saved ; but he that be-

I entreat earnestly, whosoever is a servant of God, that he may be prompt to be the bearer of this letter; that it in no way be abstracted by any one, but far rather that it be read before all the people, and in the presence of Coroticus himself. To the end, that if God would inspire them, that they may at some time return to God, or even though late may repent of what they have done so impiously—murderers of brethren in the Lord—and may liberate the baptized captives, whom they have taken before, so that they may deserve to live unto God, and may be made whole here and in eternity. Peace be to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The Doubtful Remains of Patrick.

I.—SAYINGS OF PATRICK.

HE following Dic̄ta Patricii, or Sayings of St. Patrick, are given in Latin in the Rolls edition of the Tripartite Life, p. 301, as contained at the end of the Notes by Muirchu Maccu-Machtheni in the Book of Armagh, fol. 9, a. i. They are, as Dr. Whitley

Stokes observes, disconnected from the context in that MS., with the simple heading Dic̄ta Patricii, and are in very rustic Latin. The character of their Latinity renders it highly probable that they may be genuine remains of the saint, while the manner in which the Greek Κύριε ἐλέεισον (Lord, have mercy on us) is transliterated into Latin (in Sayings No. 4 and 5) is sufficient to show how slight an acquaintance Patrick had with the Greek language. The latter point confutes Nicholson's arguments (on pp. 84, 85, 168 of his work), in which he seeks to prove that ‘St. Patrick read the Scriptures from the Greek language alone.’

We have for convenience sake numbered the Sayings, and append them here, with the addition of a few notes :—

1. ‘I had the fear of God as the guide of my journey through the Gauls [per Gallias] and Italy, even in the islands which are in the Tyrrhenian Sea.’

The latter portion of this saying, from ‘through the Gauls,’ is incorporated into Tírechán’s notes or collections of facts concerning Patrick found in the Book of Armagh. (Rolls edition, p. 302.) Dr. W. Stokes says that these notes are said to have been ‘written from the dictation or copied from a book (ex ore vel libro) of his foster-father or tutor, Bishop Altán of Ardbracca, who died A.D. 656.’ (Rolls edition of Tripartite Life, p. xci.) If the ‘saying’ be genuine, Patrick must have visited Italy. But the evidence is weak, and will not bear much weight to be put upon it.

2. ‘From the world ye have passed on to Paradise.’

The saying quoted occurs in the Epistle to Coroticus, § 9, p. 78.

3. ‘Thanks be to God ! ’

This saying, which is found in the Coroticus, p. 78, and in the Confession, pp. 54, 57, 64 (compare also pp. 60, 66, 68), is entitled, from the frequency of its occurrence, to be numbered separately. The saying is well illustrated by the following story, given by Muirchu in his Notes on St. Patrick's Life (which are of the seventh century). Dáire, the Irish chieftain, who afterwards gave the site for a church at Armagh, sent to the saint as a present a caldron of brass which had been imported from across the sea. Patrick, on receiving the gift, said simply, Grazacham (gratias agamus, 'Let us give thanks,' i.e., to God). Dáire went back to his home, muttering, 'The man is a fool who said nothing but grazacham for a brazen caldron of such a size!' He then ordered his servants to go and bring him back the caldron. They went forthwith to the saint, and said, 'We are going to take away the caldron.' Patrick said again, 'Grazacham, take it away!' They accordingly took it back. When they returned, Dáire asked them, 'What did the Christian say when you took it away?' They answered that he said, 'Grazacham' Dáire exclaimed, 'Grazacham, when it was given! grazacham, when it was taken away! his saying is so good with those grazachams, that his caldron shall be brought back to him again!' (Rolls Tripartite, p. 291.) The same story is repeated in the Tripartite Life (which was written in the eleventh century) at pp. 230, 231 of the Rolls edition. See also Miss Cusack's Life of St. Patrick, p. 351, Dr. Todd's Life, p. 471. On the story, compare the words in Job i. 21: 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.'

4. 'The Church of the Scots, nay even of the Romans, (chant) as Christians, so, that ye may be Romans, (chant) as it ought to be chanted with you, at every hour of prayer that praiseworthy sentence, Curie lession, Christe lession [“Lord, have mercy upon us,” “Christ have mercy upon us.”].

The Latin is : ‘Aeclessia Scotorum, immo Romanorum, ut Christiani, ita ut Romani sitis, ut decantetur uobiscum oportet omni hora orationis uox illa laudabilis “Curie lession, Christe lession.”’ It is evidently corrupt with its three “ut”s. Dr. Whitley Stokes has suggested to me that it should be read thus : ‘Acclessia Scottorum immo Romanorum, ut Christiani ita et Romani sitis, et decantetur vobiscum ut oportet omni hora orationis vox illa laudabilis,’ &c. It should then be translated :—

‘Church of the Scots, nay of the Romans, as ye are Christians so also be Romans ; and let that praiseworthy sentence be chanted by you at every (canonical) hour, as it ought to be, “Lord, have mercy upon us, Christ, have mercy upon us.”’

It must not be forgotten that in the Epistle to Coroticus Patrick speaks of himself as a Roman and a freeman (see Coroticus, p. 76). He also there alludes to ‘the Roman and Gallic Christians’ as superior to other Christians in civilisation. It is most natural, therefore, to interpret the meaning of this saying to be : Imitate the customs of those Christians whose higher civilisation is a matter of general acknowledgment, and follow their example by making use of the versicle in question.

5. ‘Let every Church that follows me chant, “Curie lesson, Christe lesson.”’ Thanks be to God !’

The words quoted by St. Patrick in these two ‘sayings’ are Κύριε ἐλέεισον, Χριστε ἐλ εισον.

II.—PROVERBS OF PATRICK.

HE following twelve sayings, styled Proverbia St. Patricii, are given by Villanueva (see Introduction, p. 12), as, according to Jocelin, having been translated into Latin from the Irish. All these ‘sayings,’ with others, are also given in Latin in the ‘Extracts from the Irish Canons’ in the Rolls Tripartite, p. 507 ff. Their authenticity is, however, somewhat questionable, although the Biblical quotations are curiously similar to those found in the genuine writings.

1. ‘Patrick says : “It is better for us to admonish the negligent, that crimes may not abound, than to blame the things that have been done.” Solomon says : “It is better to reprove than to be angry.”’

The passage referred to is, however, not found in the Solomonic writings, but occurs in Ecclesiasticus (the Book of Jesus the Son of Sirach) xx. 1. The Latin, melius est arguere quam irasci, is different from the Vulg. and the Itala, quam bonum est arguere quam irasci.

2. ‘Patrick says : “ Judges of the Church ought not to have the fear of man, but the fear of God, because the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom ” (Prov. i. 7).’

3. ‘ Judges of the Church ought not to have the wisdom of this world, “ for the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God,” but to have the “ wisdom of God ” (1 Cor. iii. 19 ; i. 21).’

4. ‘ Judges of the Church ought not to take gifts, because “ gifts blind the eyes of the wise, and change the words of the just.” ’

The passage referred to is Ecclesiasticus xx. 31, but the quotation is not exact. The words quoted by Patrick are, munera excæcant oculos sapientium et mutant verba justorum. The Itala and Vulgate have : Xenia et dona excæcant oculos judicum, et quasi mutus in ore avertit correptiones eorum, i.e., ‘ Presents and gifts blind the eyes of judges, and make them dumb in the mouth, so that they cannot correct.’ (Douay Version.) The rendering of the latter clause in the Douay Version is a paraphrase of the Latin and Greek.

5. ‘ Judges of the Church ought not to respect a person in judgment, “ for there is no respect of persons with God ” (Rom. ii. 11).’

6. ‘ Judges of the Church ought not to have worldly wisdom (cautelam sœcularem), but Divine examples (before them), for it does not become the servant of God to be crafty or cunning (cautum aut astutum).’

Villanueva explains cautela sacerularis as equivalent to the sapientia carnis, ‘the wisdom of the flesh,’ or ‘carnal wisdom,’ of Rom. viii. 7. Compare 1 Cor. iii. 19.

7. ‘Judges of the Church ought not to be so swift in judgment until they know how too true it may be which is written, “Do not desire quickly to be a judge.”’

The passage cited is Eccles. vii. 6. The quotation is slightly different from the Vulg. Patrick quotes the words, noli judex esse cito. The Itala and Vulg. have, noli quærere fieri iudex, ‘Seek not to be made a judge.’ (Douay Version.)

8. ‘Judges of the Church ought not to be voluble.’

The doctrine of St. Patrick here is akin to that in James i. 19, 20.

9. ‘Judges of the Church ought not to tell a lie, for a lie is a great crime.’

Compare John viii. 44; Eph. iv. 25; Rev. xxii. 15.

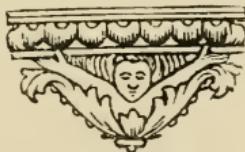

10. ‘Judges of the Church ought to “judge just judgment,” “for with whatever judgment they shall judge, it shall be judged to them.”’

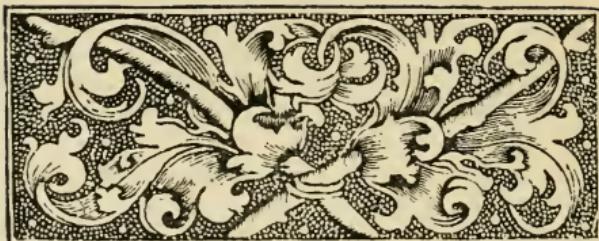

The first passage quoted is from John vii. 24. The second passage is from Matt. vii. 2. Patrick quotes the latter: in quocunque judicio judicaverint, judicabitur de illis. The Vulgate is, in quo enim judicio judicaveritis, judicabimini, ‘for with what judgment you judge, you shall be judged.’ Similarly the Itala.

11. ‘Patrick says : “Look into the examples of the elders, where you will find no guile.”’

The Latin is : exempla majorum perquire ubi nihil fallaciæ invenies. By ‘the elders’ Villanueva considers Patrick means the saints, apostles, evangelists, and disciples of the Lord, and the fathers and doctors of the Church.

12. ‘Patrick says : “Judges who do not judge rightly the judgments of the Church are not judges, but falsifiers (falsatores).”’

III.—THE STORY OF PATRICK AND THE ROYAL DAUGHTERS.

HE following story, which is given in Tirechan's collection, found in the Book of Armagh, bears internal evidence of its antiquity and genuineness. 'The naïveté of the questions asked by the girls about God and His sons and daughters' is one of these striking evidences, for they are, as Whitley Stokes observes, 'questions which no mere legend-monger ever had the imagination to invent.' The narrative is quite superior to the surroundings in which it occurs in Tírechán (Rolls Tripartite, p. 314), or in the later Tripartite Life (pp. 99 ff.). We have translated it from the former, adding in the notes the more important readings found in the Tripartite Life.

But thence went the holy Patrick to the spring which is called Clebach,* on the sides of Crochan,† towards the rising of the sun, before the rising of the sun, and they sat beside the springs. And behold two daughters of Loegaire,* Ethne the fair, and Fedelm the ruddy, came to the spring in the morning, after the custom of women, to wash,† and they found a holy synod of bishops with Patrick by the spring.‡ And they did not know from whence they were, or of what shape, or of what people, or of what region. But they thought that they were men of the side, or of the terrestrial gods, or an apparition.§ And the daughters said to them—

* Cliabach. (Trip.)

† Cruachan. (Trip.)

‘Whence are ye, and whence have ye come?’

And Patrick said to them—

‘It were better that you would confess our true God than to inquire about our race.’

The first daughter said, ‘Who is God? And where is God? And of what is God? And where is His dwelling-place? Has your God sons and daughters, gold and silver? Is He ever-living? Is He beautiful? Have many fostered His Son? Are His daughters dear and beautiful to the men of the world? Is He in heaven or on earth? In the sea? in the rivers? in the mountains? in the valleys? Tell us how is He seen? How is He loved? How is He found? Is He in youth? or in age?’||

But holy Patrick, full of the Holy Spirit, answering, said—

* ‘Loegaire, son of Niall.’ (Trip.)

† ‘to wash their hands.’ (Trip.)

‡ ‘the maidens found beside the well the assembly of clerics in white garments, with their books before them.’ (Trip.)

|| The questions are somewhat transposed in the Tripartite Life, but are substantially identical.

‘Our God is the God of all men, the God of heaven and earth, of the sea, and of the rivers ; the God of the sun and of the moon, of all the stars ; the God of the lofty mountains and of the lowly valleys ; the God over heaven and in heaven and under heaven. He has His dwelling towards heaven and earth, and the sea, and all things which are in them. He inspires all things, He gives life to all things, He surpasses all things, He supports all things. He kindles the light of the sun, He strengthens the light of the moon at night for watches ;* and He made springs in the arid land, and dry islands in the sea ; and the stars He placed to minister to the greater lights. He has a Son co-eternal with Himself and like unto Himself. The Son is not younger than the Father, nor is the Father older than the Son. The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are not separated. I truly desire to unite you to the Heavenly King, since ye are daughters of an earthly king. Believe (on Him).’

And the daughters said, as if with one mouth and heart—

‘How can we believe on the Heavenly King ? Teach us most diligently, so that we may see Him face to face. Point out to us, and we will do whatsoever thou shalt say to us.’

And Patrick said : ‘Do you believe that the sin of your father and mother is taken away by baptism ?’

They replied : ‘We do believe it.’

[Patrick] ‘Do you believe that there is repentance after sin ?’

And the saint said to them : ‘Unless you shall have tasted death, you cannot see the face of Christ, and unless you shall receive the sacrifice,’†

And they replied : ‘Give to us the sacrifice, that we may see the Son our spouse.’

And they received the Eucharist of God, and they slept in death. And they placed them in a bed covered with one mantle, and their friends made a wailing and a great lamentation. . . . And the days of the wailing for the daughters of the king were ended, and they buried them by the spring Cleback, and they made a round ditch in the likeness of a ferta [a grave], because so the Scotic men and Gentiles used to do. But, with us it is called relic, that is, the remains and feurt.

The latter few lines of the story are slightly different in the Tripartite Life. It will be observed that the doctrine set forth with regard to the two sacraments is somewhat questionable. But it must be remembered that errors on those points were prevalent in the Church of the fifth century. The story in general is one of considerable beauty, and is worthy to be preserved as a genuine fragment of a striking missionary incident in the early part of that century.

IV.—PATRICK'S VISION OF THE FUTURE OF IRELAND.

THE following account of our saint's vision concerning the future of Ireland is given in Jocelin's Life of St. Patrick, in chapter clxxv. As it is referred to in Rev. Robert King's valuable Primer of the History of the Irish Church (3 vols., Dublin, 1845-51), we give it in full here, with Jocelin's exposition.

And the man of God was anxiously desiring, and earnestly praying, that he might be certified of the present and future state of Hibernia, to the end that he might know with what devotion of faith he was burning, and also the value of his labour in the sight of God. Then the Lord heard the desire of his heart and manifested that which he sought for unto him by an evident revelation.

For while he was engaged in prayer, and the heart of his mind was opened, he beheld the whole island to be as it were a flaming fire ascending unto heaven, and he heard the Angel of God saying unto him, ‘Such at this time is Hibernia in the sight of the Lord.’ And after a little space he beheld in all parts of the island cone-like mountains of fire stretching unto the skies. And again, after a little space, he beheld as it were candlesticks burning, and after a while darkness intervened ; and then he beheld scanty lights, and at length he beheld coals lying hidden here and there, as reduced unto ashes, yet appearing still burning.

And the Angel added : ‘What thou seest here shown in different states are the Irish nations.’ Then the saint, weeping exceedingly, repeated often the words of the Psalmist, saying : ‘Will God cast off for ever, and will He be no more entreated ? Shall His mercy come to an end from generation to generation ? Shall God forget to be merciful, and shut up His mercy in His displeasure ?’

And the Angel said, ‘Look towards the northern side, and on the right hand of an height shalt thou behold the darkness dispersed from the face of the light which thenceforth will arise.’

Then the saint raised his eyes, and behold, he at first saw a small light arising in Ulidia, the which struggled a long time with the darkness, and at length dispersed it, and illumined with its rays the whole island. Nor ceased the light to increase and to prevail, even until it had restored to its former fiery state all Hibernia.

Then was the heart of St. Patrick filled with joy, and his tongue with exultation, giving thanks for all these things which had been shown unto him by grace. And he understood in the greatness of this fiery ardour of the Christian faith, the devotion and zeal for religion wherewith those islanders burned. By the fiery mountains he understood the saints, illustrious by miracles and words and by their examples. By the diminution of the light, the decrease of holiness. By the darkness that covered the land, the infidelity prevailing therein. By the intervals of delay, the distances of the succeeding times.

But the people think the period of darkness was that in which Gurmundus and Turgesius, heathen Norwegian princes, conquered and ruled in Hibernia. For in those days the saints, like coals covered with ashes, lay hidden in caves and dens from the face of the wicked, who pursued them all the day like sheep for the slaughter. Whence it happened that differing rites and new sacraments, which were contrary to the ecclesiastical institutions, were introduced into the Church and by prelates of the Holy Church ignorant of the Divine law. But the light arising first from the northern part, and after long conflict exterminating the darkness, those born in Hibernia assert to be St. Malachy, who presided first in the Church at Dunum [Down], afterward in the metropolis, Ardmachia [Armagh], and reduced the island unto the Christian law. On the other hand, the people of Britain ascribe this light to their coming, for that then the Church seemed under their rule to be advanced unto a better state ; and that then religion seemed to be planted and propagated, and the sacraments of the Church, and the institutions of the Christian law, to be observed with more regular observance.

But I do not pretend to decide of this contention, neither do I solve it, but I think that the discussion and the decision thereof should be left to the Divine Judgment.

Jocelin's Life of St. Patrick is given in Messing- hami Florilegium Insulæ Sanctorum seu Vitæ et Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ, &c., Parisiis, 1624. A translation of this work into English, rather free in many places, but sufficiently close to give a good idea of the original, appeared in 1809—namely, The Life and Acts of St. Patrick, the Archbishop, Primate, and Apostle of Ireland, now first translated from the original Latin of Jocelin, the Cistercian Monk of Furnes, who flourished in the early part of the twelfth century; with the elucidations of David Rothe, Bishop of Ossory. By EDMUND L. SWIFT, Esq. Dublin: Printed for the Hibernian Press Company by James Blyth, 1809. Our translation is taken from the original. Much interesting matter is contained in Messingham's Florilegium, but the account of this vision in Jocelin's Life appears to us one of the few grains of wheat in a bushel of rubbish. Jocelin had, however, access to works now lost, and hence there may be something genuine in this vision. It is at any rate interesting. King gives in his History an attempt at a Protestant interpretation of this prophecy. It is certainly susceptible of being explained of the light of the Reformation; and was most suitably applied to the light diffused throughout Ireland by means of Trinity College, Dublin, in the congratulatory address presented to that university on its tercentenary in 1892 by the Proreector and Senatus of the University of Heidelberg.

V.—A NEWLY-DISCOVERED CONFES-SION ATTRIBUTED TO ST. PATRICK.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

FRESH contribution to the Patrician literature has recently appeared in the Revue Celtique (Vol. xv., No. 2) for April, 1894. Paris : Librairie Emile Bouillon, editor : published under the superintendence of eminent Celtic scholars. The chief editors are H. d'Arbois de Jubainville, Membre de l'Institut, Professor in the College de France, with J. Loth, Dean of the Faculty of Letters at Rennes ; E. Ernault, Professor of the Faculty of Letters at Poitiers, and G. Dottin, Master of Conferences of the Faculty of Letters at Rennes, Editorial Secretary. The article is written by M. Samuel Berger, Professor in the Protestant Theological Faculty, Paris, and is entitled, Confession des Péchés attribuée à saint Patrice.

This Confession is given by M. Berger in the original Latin, of which we subjoin a translation in English, in order to render our edition of The Writings of St. Patrick as complete as possible.

M. Berger states in the opening note to his article that this confession was discovered in the library of the town of Angers, capital of the Department of Maine and Loire. The manuscript is numbered Angers 14, and is a MS. of the ninth, or rather of the ninth or tenth century. The Confessio begins at folio 180 verso, at the end of the Gallican Psalter, immediately followed by canticles and a litany, in which are invocations addressed to the saints of the centre and north of France (from Bourges and Poitiers to Cologne and Liege), together with St. Boniface, St. Columba, and St. Gall. St. Boniface was an English missionary; but St. Columba and St. Gall, it may be noted, were both missionaries from Ireland. The Confession of St. Patrick is followed at folio 183 verso by the ‘Confessio quam beatus Alcuinus composuit Domino Karolo imperatori,’ or the confession which St. Alcuin composed for the use of the Emperor Charles the Great. Alcuin was a native of York, trained and educated in that city. He established a school in connection with the monastery of Tours about A.D. 796. The MS. contains other pieces, especially prayers. M. Berger thinks the MS. must have been written at Tours, for the writing exhibits the marks specially characteristic of the MSS. written in that famous monastery. Tours, it must be remembered, is not very far distant further up the Loire.

When one examines into the style of the Confessio before us, it cannot be denied that its Latin is very different from that which appears in the Confession or autobiography preserved in the Book of Armagh and the other ancient MSS. noticed in our Introduction. In a piece of this character, copied into the Angers MS., as a confession for the use of private Christians, and not because of any special value in relation to the life of St. Patrick himself, the scribe might have had no scruple whatever in correcting, according to his ability, instances of faulty Latin, such as abound in St. Patrick's own writings. It would also be natural to make St. Patrick's quotations from Scripture conform to the Vulgate version which was in common use for ages prior to the ninth century. Although there are cases of doubtful Latinity in the Latin original edited by M. Berger, it is clear that St. Patrick could not have written Latin as pure as that found in this MS. The Latinity of the piece may not, for the reason stated, be quite conclusive against its Patrician authorship. Nor is the Patrician authorship conclusively disproved by the fact that the Bible quotations, where not loosely quoted from memory, are in this confession all derived from the Vulgate.

M. Berger observes that these books of penitence appear to have come originally from Ireland. Books of that kind seem to have been designed to teach those who used them how to make their humble confessions before God in prayer. M. Berger remarks that the names of authors are in several cases apparently assigned to them at random. He remarks that the Penitential of St. Columba is the first work in the series of such compositions, the authenticity of which can be affirmed with certainty. He considers the Confession of Angers to be probably a genuine Irish work, although it is more than doubtful that St. Patrick was its author. But when we reflect on the close connection into which the monastery of Tours, where it was probably written, was brought with Ireland, it is possible that the scribe may have had evidence in favour of the Patrician authorship, which has not come down to us. In its present form the language of this Confessio, if a work of St. Patrick, must have undergone considerable revision, a revision which, under the circumstances, was natural and justifiable.

Turning next to internal evidence, if the piece be regarded as a personal confession of sins, and not one drawn up for the use of converts, there are several points which are inconsistent with St. Patrick's genuine writings. Though he was fully aware from our Lord's teaching in the Sermon on the Mount that sins of uncleanness may be committed by evil thoughts as well as by evil actions, it is difficult to suppose that St. Patrick could have been guilty of such transgressions as this Confession would lead us to conclude. He denies explicitly in his genuine Confession (see pp. 68, 69) that he ever received gifts, while in this newly-found Confession he confesses himself guilty of that sin.

Whatever St. Patrick's early career may have been, and, according to his own statements, prior to his captivity he did not live a holy life (see pp. 47, 50, 58, 61), it is hard to imagine he could have had opportunity to transgress in the way of gluttony and riotous living as described in this writing.

After careful consideration of the composition, we must therefore view it, not as designed to be a record of the author's own personal frailties, but rather as a touchstone by which his converts might examine into their individual lives.

Two points, however, in this newly-discovered Confession are in favour of its belonging to the age of St. Patrick—namely, the reference to sinning by divinations (compare stanza 6 of the Irish hymn), and to sinning by partaking of polluted food. The story of St. Patrick's being tempted to eat honey offered in sacrifice to idols, as told in the genuine Confession at p. 54, may illustrate the latter.

The last ten lines of the special confession of sins do appear to have a sort of Patrician ring about them.

The doctrine of the Angers Confession is in harmony with the primitive faith set forth in St. Patrick's writings. There is not one word in it which contains the slightest allusion to the invocation of saints or angels, although angels are alluded to as witnesses of the sins of men. Christ is described as being alone without sin, a doctrine inconsistent with the late mediæval notion of the sinlessness of the Virgin Mary.

It is important also to note that there is no reference in the Confession to any 'auricular confession' made to a priest; and the expressions used in the commencement of the last paragraph which speak of Christ as the High Priest to whom sin is to be confessed, are opposed to any such practice.

Although it is true that this confession of sins is 'drawn up without any order,' and that, short as it is, it contains various repetitions, the doctrine set forth is highly Evangelical. And as it is probably of an Irish type, it seems to prove that the doctrines of the Irish missionaries of that date were in the main pure and Scriptural. The Divinity of Christ—for the composition is a confession addressed to Christ, and to Him alone—is unmistakably affirmed. There are but two allusions to God the Father, and one to the Holy Spirit, which all occur at the end of the first paragraph.

This new discovery is then of sufficient importance to justify our exhibiting here a complete translation of its text.

[HERE] BEGINS THE CONFESSION OF SAINT PATRICK, BISHOP.

God, my God, omnipotent King, I humbly adore Thee. Thou art King of kings, Lord of lords.¹ Thou art the Judge of every age.² Thou art the Redeemer of souls. Thou art the Liberator of those who believe. Thou art the Hope of those who toil. Thou art the Comforter of those in sorrow. Thou art the Way to those who wander. Thou art Master to the nations.³ Thou art the Creator of all creatures. Thou art the Lover of all good. Thou art the Prince of all virtues. Thou art the joy of all Thy saints. Thou art life perpetual.⁴ Thou art joy in truth.⁵ Thou art the exultation in the eternal fatherland.⁶ Thou art the Light of light.⁷ Thou art the Fountain of holiness. Thou art the glory of God the Father in the height. Thou art Saviour of the world. Thou art the plenitude of the Holy Spirit.⁸ Thou sittest at the right hand of God the Father on the throne, reigning for ever.

I seek for forgiveness of my sins, O my God, Jesus Christ. Thou art He who desirest no one to perish, ‘but will have all men saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth.’⁹ Thou, O God, with Thy holy and chaste mouth hast said : In whatever day the sinner may be converted ‘living he shall live and shall not die.’¹⁰ I will return to Thee, O God, and with all my heart¹¹ will cry to Thee, my God, and to Thee now I desire to confess my sins. My transgressions are multiplied above me,¹² because my sins have no number before Thine eyes. O Lord, I appear [i.e., stand before Thee] a witness accused by conscience. I dare not ask what I do not deserve to obtain. For Thou knowest, Lord, all things which are done in us, and we blush to confess what by ourselves¹² we do not fear to commit. In words alone [tantum] we obey Thee, in heart we lie. And what we do not say we desire we approve of by our acts.¹³ Spare, Lord, those confessing, pardon those sinning. Pity those asking Thee, for in Thy mysteries my perception is weak.¹⁴ Show, Lord, Thou who dost not receive prayers [verba] from us¹⁵ with hard heart, that through Thee Thou mayest bestow pardon on us, O Jesus Christ our Lord.¹⁶

I will confess to Thee, my God, because I have sinned in heaven and in earth,¹⁷ and before Thee, and before Thy angels, and before the face of all Thy saints.

I have sinned by negligence of Thy commands and of my deeds.

I have sinned by pride and by envy.

I have sinned by detraction and by avarice.

I have sinned by luxury¹⁸ and by malice.

I have sinned by fornication and by gluttony.¹⁹

mind.²¹

I have sinned by impatience and by imperfection of hope.

I have sinned by hardness and by blindness of heart and mind.

I have sinned by forgetfulness²² of the love of God and of my neighbour.

I have sinned by disobedience and by the loss of good ordinances.²³

I have sinned by the loss of heavenly desires and by the love of earthly things.

I have sinned by inclinations to evil, and by deceitful arguments.

I have sinned by evil examples, and by the uncleanliness of humanity.

I have sinned by vain melancholy,²⁴ and by stupor of mind.

I have sinned by feigned humility, and loss of the love of God.

I have sinned by cursing, and by divinations.²⁵

I have sinned by the non-accomplishment of my vows and by wicked inventions.

I have sinned by [over-] investigation²⁶ of the majesty of God, and of heavenly life.

I have sinned by pomps of the body, and by canvassing for the favours of men.

I have sinned by the intemperance of mirth and madness.

I have sinned by laziness and indolence of mind.

I have sinned by counsels of iniquity, and by returning of evil.

I have sinned by concupiscence and by perpetration of lust.

I have sinned by consent to, and by knowledge of, evil acts and words.

I have sinned by works upon the Lord's day and by illuring imaginations.²⁷

I have sinned by sorrow of the world,²⁸ and by love of money,²⁹ and by ambitions after honours.

I have sinned by imperfection, and negligence of amendment.

I have sinned by presumption and despair.

I have sinned by acceptance of unjust gifts and by the punishments of impious acts.

I have sinned by pretence, and by pleasing of myself.

I have sinned by silence concerning righteousness, and iniquity, and flattery.

I have sinned by rioting³⁰ and by taking of polluted food,³¹ and by suggestions of the devil, and by the delight of the spirit, and by knowledge of the flesh.

I have sinned in tongue and in throat.

I have sinned in neck and in breast.

I have sinned in heart and in cogitations.

I have sinned in mind and in operations.

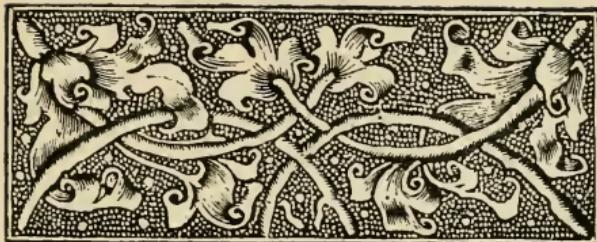

I have sinned in hands and in feet.

I have sinned in bones and in flesh.

I have sinned in marrow and in veins.

I have sinned in my mind and in my whole body.

If now Thy vengeance will be upon me as great as my sins have been multiplied in myself, how shall I sustain Thy judgment? But I have Thee as the High Priest³² to whom I confess all my sins. [I do] that to Thee alone, my God,³³ because ‘I have sinned against Thee alone,³⁴ and done evil before Thee.’³⁵ And because Thou art, O God, alone without sin, I beseech Thee, O Lord my God, by Thy passion, and by the sign of Thy salvation-bringing cross, and by the shedding of Thy blood, in order that Thou mayest grant to me remission of all my sins. I beg Thee, my Lord Jesus Christ, that Thou wilt not render to me according to my deserving, but according to Thy great compassion. Judge me, O Lord, according to the judgment of Thy indulgence. I beg Thee and I adjure Thee, O my God omnipotent, that Thou mayest plant in me Thy love and fear. Awake in me repentance of my sins, and sorrow, for Thy name’s sake. Give to me the remembrance of Thy commands, and assist me, O my God, blot out my iniquity from Thy sight, and turn not away Thy face from my prayer. ‘Cast me not out from Thy presence.’³⁶ Leave me not, my God, neither depart from me, but confirm me in Thy will. Teach me what I ought not to do, what to do, or to speak, what to keep silent. Defend me, O Lord my God, against the darts of the devil, and against the angel of hell suggesting and teaching many evil things.³⁷ Do not desert me, O Lord my God, nor leave Thy miserable servant, but assist me, my God, and perform in me Thy teaching.³⁸ Teach me to do Thy will, because Thou art my teacher and my God,³⁹ who reignest for ever and ever. Amen,

Appendix.

It will no doubt be interesting to our readers to be presented here with some poetical translations of St. Patrick's Hymn. The first is that by James Clarence Mangan, a talented but unfortunate Irish poet. It originally appeared in Duffy's Magazine, and was afterwards reprinted in a volume of Mangan's collected Poems, with a Biographical Introduction by John Mitchell (New York, 1859). It was also given in the appendix to the first edition of The College Irish Grammar, by Rev. Ulick J. Bourke (Dublin, O'Daly, 1856), and later in Canon McIlwaine's Lyra Hibernica, Belfast, Dublin, and London, 2nd ed., 1879. The translation is a very spirited one, and 'preserves,' as Dr. Todd remarks in his work on St. Patrick, the Apostle of Ireland, 'the tone and spirit of the original.' It must be remembered that this version was founded on the translation originally made by Dr. Petrie, and therefore has the error of translating the opening words of the hymn 'At Tara,' as well as others mentioned in our notes. (See note 2, p. 121.)

I.

ST. PATRICK'S HYMN BEFORE TARA.

I.

At Tara to-day, in this awful hour,
I call on the Holy Trinity !
Glory to Him who reigneth in power,
The God of the elements, Father and Son,
And paraclete Spirit, which Three are the One,
The everlasting Divinity !

II.

At Tara to-day, I call on the Lord,
On Christ, the Omnipotent Word,
Who came to redeem from death and sin,
Our fallen race ;
And I put, and I place,
The virtue that lieth in
His incarnation lowly,
His baptism pure and holy,
His life of toil, and tears, and affliction,
His dolorous death, His crucifixion,
His burial, sacred, and sad, and lone,
His resurrection to life again,
His glorious ascension to heaven's high throne,
And lastly, His future dread
And terrible coming to judge all men—
Both the living and the dead.

III.

At Tara to-day, I put and I place,
The virtue that dwells in the seraphim's love ;
And the virtue and grace
That are in the obedience,

And unshaken allegiance,
Of all the archangels and angels above ;
And in the hope of the resurrection
To everlasting reward and election ;
And in the prayers of the fathers of old ;
And in the truths the prophets foretold ;
And in the apostles' manifold preaching ;
And in the confessors' faith and teaching ;
And in the purity ever-dwelling
 Within the Immaculate Virgin's * breast ;
And in the actions bright and excelling,
 Of all good men, the just and the best.

IV.

At Tara to-day, in this fateful hour,
I place all heaven with its power,
And the sun with its brightness,
And the snow with its whiteness,
And fire with all the strength it hath,
And lightning with its rapid wrath,
And the winds with their swiftness along their path,
And the sea with its deepness,
And the rocks with their steepness,
And the earth with its starkness,
 All these I place,
 By God's almighty help and grace,
Between myself and the powers of darkness.

* The translator has here taken an unwarranted liberty with the hymn, which does not contain any reference to the Virgin Mary. The term 'immaculate' is, of course, highly objectionable, as introducing an epithet which would be interpreted by all as referring to the novel dogma of 'the immaculate conception.' The term 'immaculate' might in itself be defensible in the loose sense of 'stainless,' i.e., one whose life was pure and unspotted.

v.

At Tara to-day,
 May God be my stay !
 May the strength of God now nerve me !
 May the power of God preserve me !
 May God the Almighty be near me !
 May God the Almighty espy me !
 May God the Almighty hear me !
 May God give me eloquent speech !
 May the arm of God protect me !
 May the wisdom of God direct me !
 May God give me power to teach and to preach !
 May the shield of God defend me !
 May the host of God attend me,
 And warn me,
 And guard me,
 Against the wiles of demons and devils ;
 Against temptations of vice and evils ;
 Against the bad passions and wrathful will
 Of the reckless mind and the wicked heart ;
 Against every man that designs me ill,
 Whether leagued with others, or plotting apart.

vi.

In this hour of hours,
 I place all those powers,
 Between myself and every foe,
 Who threatens my body and soul
 With danger or dole ;
 To protect me against the evils that flow
 From lying soothsayers' incantations ;
 From the gloomy laws of the Gentile nations ;
 From heresy's hateful innovations ;
 From idolatry's rites and invocations :

By these my defenders,
 My guards against every ban—
 And spells of smiths, and Druids, and women ;
 In fine, against every knowledge that renders
 The light Heaven sends us, dim in
 The spirit and soul of man !

VII.

May Christ, I pray,
 Protect me to-day,
 Against poison and fire ;
 Against drowning and wounding ;
 That so in His grace abounding,
 I may earn the preacher's hire !

VIII.

Christ as a light
 Illumine and guide me !
 Christ as a shield o'ershadow and cover me !
 Christ be under me ! Christ be over me !
 Christ be beside me,
 On left hand and right !
 Christ be before me, behind me, about me !
 Christ, this day, be within and without me !

IX.

Christ the lowly and meek,
 Christ the all-powerful, be
 In the heart of each to whom I speak,
 In the mouth of each who speaks to me,
 In all who draw near me,
 Or see me, or hear me !

x.

At Tara to-day, in this awful hour,
I call on the Holy Trinity !
Glory to Him who reigneth in power,
The God of the elements, Father and Son,
And paraclete Spirit, which Three are the One,
The everlasting Divinity !

xi.

Salvation dwells with the Lord,
With Christ, the Omnipotent Word,
From generation to generation,
Grant us, O Lord, Thy grace and salvation !

II.

THE following version is from the facile pen of the late Mrs. Alexander, wife of the present Archbishop of Armagh. It is closer to the original than the preceding, the latest corrections made by Dr. Whitley Stokes being used. It has been issued, pointed and accentuated for chanting, by the Irish Christian Knowledge Association. Mrs. Alexander's version is now widely used in Ireland, in the services of the Church of Ireland on St. Patrick's Day, and on other occasions. It was sung at York Minster as a processional hymn on St. Patrick's Day, 1891, when Archbishop Magee, who was an Irishman, was enthroned (see pp. 14, 15). The version was appended to this work by the kind permission of Mrs. Alexander.

I bind unto myself to-day
The strong name of the Trinity,
By invocation of the same,
The Three in One and One in Three.

I bind this day to me for ever,
By power of faith, Christ's Incarnation ;
His baptism in Jordan river ;
His death on cross for my salvation ;
His bursting from the spicèd tomb ;
His riding up the heavenly way ;
His coming at the day of doom ;
I bind unto myself to-day.

I bind unto myself the power
Of the great love of Cherubim ;
The sweet 'Well done' in judgment hour ;
The service of the Seraphim,
Confessors' faith, Apostles' word,
The Patriarchs' prayers, the Prophets' scrolls,
All good deeds done unto the Lord,
And purity of virgin souls.

I bind unto myself to-day
The virtues of the star-lit heaven,
The glorious sun's life-giving ray,
The whiteness of the moon at even,
The flashing of the lightning free,
The whirling wind's tempestuous shocks,
The stable earth, the deep salt sea,
Around the old eternal rocks.

I bind unto myself to-day
The power of God to hold and lead,
His eye to watch, His might to stay,
His ear to hearken to my need.
The wisdom of my God to teach,
His hand to guide, His shield to ward ;
The Word of God to give me speech,
His heavenly host to be my guard.

Against the demon snares of sin,
 The vice that gives temptation force,
 The natural lusts that war within,
 The hostile men that mar my course ;
 Or few or many, far or nigh,
 In every place, and in all hours,
 Against their fierce hostility,
 I bind to me these holy powers.

Against all Satan's spells and wiles,
 Against false words of heresy,
 Against the knowledge that defiles,
 Against the heart's idolatry,
 Against the wizard's evil craft,
 Against the death-wound and the burning,
 The choking wave, the poisoned shaft,
 Protect me, Christ, till Thy returning.

Christ be with me, Christ within me,
 Christ behind me, Christ before me,
 Christ beside me, Christ to win me,
 Christ to comfort and restore me,
 Christ beneath me, Christ above me,
 Christ in quiet, Christ in danger,
 Christ in hearts of all that love me,
 Christ in mouth of friend and stranger.

I bind unto myself the Name,
 The strong Name of the Trinity ;
 By invocation of the same,
 The Three in One, and One in Three.
 Of Whom all nature hath creation ;
 Eternal Father, Spirit, Word :
 Praise to the Lord of my salvation,
 Salvation is of Christ the Lord.

III.

THE following metrical version appeared in the columns of the Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette for April 5, 1889. Its author, the late J. J. Murphy, Esq., was a well-known and valued writer, and for many years Hon. Sec. of the Diocesan Synod of the Diocese of Down, Connor, and Dromore. We quote Mr. Murphy's remarks :—

‘In offering a new metrical version of this poem, I do not mean to challenge comparison with Mrs. Alexander’s. Hers is meant to be sung as a hymn, for which purpose mine is not suitable.

‘The irregular stanzas of this version represent those of the original. The Latin verses which conclude the Irish original are translated by longer lines than the rest.

‘I have made this version partly from the translation in Stokes’s and Wright’s “Writings of St. Patrick,” and partly from Dr. Todd’s [see p. 15].

JOSEPH JOHN MURPHY.’

I bind as armour on my breast
The Threefold Name whereon I call,
Of Father, Son, and Spirit blest,
The Maker and the Judge of all.

I bind as armour on my breast
The power in flesh made manifest
Of Him, the Son, from Heaven who came,
His baptism in the Jordan’s wave,
His cross of pain and bitter shame,
His burial, and His opened grave ;
And God’s eternal power, whereby
He rose, ascended up on high,
And will return to judge and save.

In hope a heavenly crown to win,
 I bind as armour on my breast
 The obedience and the love wherein Angels and seraphs are possessed,
 With faithful prayer and worthy deed
 Of all the saints in history's roll,
 Who kept unstained their holy creed
 And virgin purity of soul.

As armour on my breast I bind
 The powers of God in heaven and earth ;
 The fleetness of the rushing wind,
 The brightness of the morning's birth ;
 The splendour of the fiery glow,
 The whiteness of the winter snow,
 The lightning's wildly flashing mirth ;
 The strength that girds the rocky steep,
 The vastness of the unfathomed deep.

I bind as armour on my breast
 The Wisdom which shall be my guide ;
 The Shield whose shelter bids me rest
 In peace, whatever ills betide ;
 The Eye of God, to search my thought ;
 His Ear, my prayer of faith to hear ;
 His Word, to make my words be fraught
 With courage which His foes shall fear ;
 His angel host, to guard my path
 Against all human guile and wrath,
 Against the tempter's lures to sin,
 Against the lusts that strive within.

All these upon my breast I bind
 Against my foes in earth and hell ;
 Against the sorcerer's chanted spell,
 And sway of idols o'er the mind ;

Falsehoods of heresy, and powers
That rule the heathen in the hours
Of darkness ; women's evil wiles ;
And all the knowledge that defiles.

Guard me and shield me, Christ, my Lord !
Guard me against my foe's desire ;
Guard me in dangers of the fire,
Guard me in dangers of the sea ;
Guard me, O Lord, in serving Thee,
And make me share the great reward.

Christ be within me and around ;
Christ on my left hand and my right ;
May Christ in all my thoughts be found,
Christ in all breadth, and depth, and height !

May Christ be in their eyes that see
Thy servant, and their ears that hear ;
Christ in his thoughts who thinks on me,
Christ on his lips who draweth near.

I bind as armour on my breast
The Threefold Name whereon I call,
Of Father, Son, and Spirit blest,
The Maker and the Judge of all.

Salvation is of Thee, the Incarnate Word ;
Now and for ever save us, Christ our Lord !

Notes.

ST. PATRICK'S HYMN.

1. The following is the Irish preface to the Hymn found in the Liber Hymnorum, Trinity College, Dublin, folio 196. The translation is given, with the original Irish, on p. 381 of the Rolls Tripartite Life of St. Patrick. We quote it as a curiosity, and nothing more, not, of course, endorsing the truth of the legend referred to.

‘Patrick made this hymn. In the time of Loegaire, son of Niall, it was made. Now, the cause of making it was to protect himself with his monks against the deadly enemies who were in ambush against the clerics. And this is a corslet of faith for the protection of body and soul against devils and human beings and vices. Whosoever shall sing it every day, with pious meditation on God, devils will not stay before him. It will be a safeguard to him against all poison and envy. It will be a defence to him against sudden death. It will be a corslet to his soul after dying. Patrick chanted this when the ambuses were set against him by Loegaire, that he might not go to Tara to sow the faith, so that there they seemed before the liers-in-wait to be wild deer, with a fawn behind them, to wit, Benén. And Fáed Fiada (“Deer’s Cry”) is its name.’

According to the story set forth in the Rolls Tripartite Life (p. 48), Patrick, with eight young clerics and Benén, his faithful servant or gillie, sometimes called his ‘foster-son’ (Tripartite, p. 144), passed safely through all the men who were lying in wait for them on the occasion of his visit to Tara. The persons lying in ambush saw only eight deer running away, and a fawn after them, which was Benén.

2. ‘The first word of this hymn Atomriug was mistaken by Dr. Petrie and Dr. O’Donovan for an obsolete form of the dative of Temur, Temoria or Tara, and was by them translated “At Tara.” We cannot now regret this error, as to it we owe the publication of this curious poem in the Essay on Tara. But it is certainly a mistake, and was acknowledged as such by Dr. O’Donovan before his death. The word is a verb; ad-domriug, i.e., ad-riug, adjungo, with the infixd pronoun dom, “to me” (see Zeuss, Gram. Celt. p. 336); the verb riug, which occurs in the forms ad-riug, con-riug, signifies “to join.”’ (Dr. Todd’s St. Patrick, p. 426.) The true analysis of the word was first pointed out by Dr. Whitley Stokes in the Saturday Review, September 5, 1857, p. 225.

3. ‘Drs. O’Donovan and Petrie translate the original word togairm, irvoco, but it is a substantive, not a verb.’ (Todd, p. 46.)

4. Dr. Todd thought cretim in this line was a noun, but it is obviously the common verb, i.e., the Latin credo. The word for ‘Threeness’ is different from that for ‘Trinity,’ hence we have followed Dr. Whitley Stokes’ new version. The sense is the same as that given in our former edition, ‘the faith of the Trinity in Unity,’ only fuller in expression. Fóisin in this line was rendered by Petrie ‘under the.’ But the correct reading is fóisitin, the instrumental sing. ‘with the confession.’ (See the Rolls Tripartite Life, pp. 48, 650.)

5. The original is dail, genitive sing. of dal, ‘judgment,’ ‘doom,’ as in dal báis, ‘doom of death,’ Lebor na hUidre, p. 118 b., not dúile, ‘elements,’ as generally given. (See the Rolls Tripartite, pp. 566, 645.) Patrick seems to have had in mind the passage in Isaiah xlvi. 7, where the words ‘I make peace and create evil’ [Vulg. et creans malum] are used of God as ‘the Creator of judgment.’ Comp. Amos iii. 6.

The expression in the Hymn ‘the Creator of Judgment’ or ‘Creator of Doom,’ appears to afford an undesigned evidence of the Patrician authorship of the poem. ‘God of Judgment’ (dar moD:a mbratha—Lebar Brecc in the Rolls Tripartite, p. 460) was a favourite expression of Patrick (compare Isaiah xxx. 18, Malachi ii. 17, Deus judicii). Compare his saying : ‘I cannot judge, but God will judge.’ (Rolls Tripartite, p. 288.) Another expression, ‘My God’s doom!’ or ‘judgment’ (mo debrod, mo debroth), was constantly in his mouth. (See the Rolls Tripartite, pp. 132, 138, 142, 168, 174, &c.) It is explained in the extract from Cormac’s Glossary, p. 571. The thoughts of the saint, on his way to Tara, must necessarily have dwelt much on the judgment and doom of idolaters in ‘the day of vengeance of our God’ (Isa. Ixi. 2). The Irish for the ‘judgment of doom’ in the last line of the second stanza of the Hymn is brethemnas bratha. Hence we have used a different English word in these places to express the difference in the original Irish.

6. Dr. Whitley Stokes has throughout ‘virtue’ in place of ‘power.’

7. The original is grad hiruphin, which is thus rendered by Dr. Whitley Stokes. The former translation was ‘the love of seraphim.’

8. This line is not in the Trinity College Liber Hymnorum. It is taken from the Bodleian copy.

9. Dr. Todd renders ‘in the prayers of the noble fathers.’ Hennessy and Dr. Whitley Stokes, ‘patriarchs.’

10. The original has ‘in the preachings’ of apostles and ‘in the faiths of confessors’ in the plural, instead of ‘preaching’ and ‘faith.’

11. So the Bodleian copy. The Trinity College MS. has etrochta snechtai, i.e., ‘whiteness of snow.’

12. The line was formerly translated ‘the force of fire, the flashing of lightning.’

13. Dr. Whitley Stokes would render ‘firmness’ or ‘steadiness of rock.’

14. So Dr. Whitley Stokes. The former translation was ‘to give me speech.’ Comp. 1 Peter iv. 11.

15. So Dr. Whitley Stokes. The former version was ‘to prevent me.’

16. The translation of the word ‘the lusts’ is uncertain, and consequently there is a blank left here in Dr. Whitley Stokes’ version.

17. So Dr. Whitley Stokes. The former translation was ‘with few or with many,’ which gives almost the same sense.

18. Dr. Whitley Stokes has ‘I summon to-day all these virtues between me [and these evils].’ Dr. Todd’s translation is ‘I have set around me.’

19. So Dr. Whitley Stokes, as the Irish is heretecka. There are slight verbal changes in his translation here which are of little importance.

20. Dr. Todd's translation is 'which blinds the soul of man,' the Trinity College MS. saying nothing of man's body (corp).

21. So Dr. Whitley Stokes renders. The words are an imitation of Eph. iii. 18, 19, 'That ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be strong to apprehend with all the saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge.' The original in the Trinity College MS. is Crist illius, Crist issius [ipsius in the Bodleian MS.], Crist inerus. Dr. Whitley Stokes, in his Goidelica (2nd edit., London, 1872, p. 153), regards lius as a derivative of leth 'breadth'; sius as derived from sith, 'long'; and erus as a derivative of 'er,' which is glossed by uasal. This Irish gloss is decisive, and shows the reference to be to Eph. iii. The words in the original have not yet been discovered elsewhere in old Irish. The former version was 'Christ in the fort, Christ in the chariot-seat, Christ in the poop,' and was explained to mean: Christ with me when I am at home; Christ with me when I am travelling by land, and in the ship when I am travelling by water. The Irish words were formerly explained: lius as dat. sing. of les, 'fort'; sius as dat. of ses, cognate with suidim, 'I sit'; erus as dat. sing. of eross, 'poop.'

22. See note 5.

23. The original of this antiphon is in Latin, the rest of the hymn is in Irish. The last stanza is—

Domini est salus, Domini est salus, Christi est salus, Salus tua, Domine, sit semper nobiscum.

THE CONFESSION OF PATRICK.

CHAPTER I.

1. This is the title given in three manuscripts. Some have 'the beginning of the Confession of St. Patrick, Bishop.'

2. Patrick or Patricius was a common name among the Romans of Britain. It occurs in Hübner's volume of British Inscriptions in Mommsen's great Corpus of Latin Inscriptions, Tom. vii., Nos. 1198 and 1336. Like many persons mentioned in the Scriptures, Patrick had many names. Patrick was his Roman or Latin name. Tirechan tells us that he had no less than three Celtic names, Succetus [Sucat], Magonus, and Cothraige (Cothrige). See Anal. Bolland ii. 35. (G. T. Stokes.) See Tripartite, p. 17.

3. According to the Trip. the Irish name of Politus was Fotid. Patrick's mother was Concessa, sister of Martin of Tours (so Marianus Scotus). There is, moreover, a citation from a text of the Confessio, not now in existence, but quoted in Colgan's Quarta Vita, which says, 'I am Patrick, son of Calfurnius, having a mother Conchessa' (Rolls Trip., p. xciii.).

4. Archdeacon Hamilton, partly following the Bollandist text, translates: 'I, Patrick, a most unlearned sinner, the least of all the faithful, and the most contemptible amongst many, have had for my father Calphurnius, a deacon, who was the son of Potitus, formerly a priest.' The construing of 'rusticissimus' with 'peccator' is faulty; but the translation of the next clause is more so. The Bollandist text has 'filium quondam Potiti Presbyteri,' rendered by Hamilton 'son of Potitus, formerly a priest.' The order of the words proves, however, that Nicholson's translation of that text is correct: 'the son of the late Potitus, a presbyter.' Olden adopts that reading. The reading of the Book of Armagh is, however, probably correct: 'filium quendam Potiti [filii Odissi] presbyteri,' lit. 'a certain son of Potitus, a presbyter.' The words in brackets are written in the margin of the Armagh copy. If the word 'presbyteri' be referred to Odissus, the Confession would contradict the statement of Fiacc's hymn, according to which Patrick is described as 'son of Calpurn, son of Potitus, grandson of Deacon Odisse.' If we combine the two statements, St. Patrick's parents up to the third generation must have been clergymen. In his summary of the Life of St. Patrick, Hamilton remarks, 'His father's name was Calphurnius; he was a Decurion, and had been formerly a deacon. I say formerly, because the law of ecclesiastical celibacy being then, as now, in force, his acceptance of Holy Orders was in conformity with this law.' Hamilton here confuses what is said of the father with what is recorded of the grandfather. But even thus the passage is against clerical celibacy. The Archdeacon is, however, more honest than the Very Rev. Arthur Ryan, of Thurles, who, in his St. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, ignores the entire statement as to St. Patrick's ecclesiastical progenitors, stating that 'his father Calphurnius was, the saint tells us, a Roman officer of good family.' This is a suppressio veri with a vengeance.

St. Patrick was proud of his noble birth and of his Roman descent. Compare his remark, the Epistle to Coroticus, § 5, p. 76, and one of the 'sayings' on p. 84. This makes the fact more remarkable that he nowhere alludes to any commission received from Rome.

5. Variously spelled in the MSS. Banavem or Benaven.

6. The birthplace of Patrick has been the subject of a prolonged controversy. Scotland, France, Ireland, have each had their champions. The claim of Ireland may be at once dismissed. It is grounded on a paragraph in the Epistle to Coroticus (p. 78), where he identifies himself with his injured converts and disciples, and protests against the Welsh invaders: ‘with them it is a crime that we have been born in Hibernia.’ In other parts of his writings he equally clearly asserts that he was not an Irishman by birth. As to the claim of France, some have upheld Boulogne as his natal place. This is possible, for, as is shown in note 6, the predatory expeditions of Niall of the Nine Hostages extended to that port during the boyhood and youth of our Saint. The majority of critics now uphold the claim of Dumbarton. Dumbarton in ancient times was called Aclut, [old Welsh, Ail cluaithe in old Irish], and formed the western termination of the Roman Wall, extending from the Forth to the Clyde. That wall was constructed by Agricola about the year 80 A.D., and renewed in the secord century under Antoninus Pius. Dumbarton, with its great rock as an acropolis, formed a natural stronghold and post of observation against the Scotic freebooters of the Antrim coast. The Romans, though they never settled in Ireland, yet made the acquaintance of the Irish. Agricola even in the first century contemplated the conquest of the island, and with that design entertained a fugitive Irish prince, as Tacitus tells us. The Romans of Dumbarton must have suffered much at the hands of Irish pirates down to the fifth century, as is testified by the numerous finds of Roman coins all along the Antrim coast. (See Ireland and the Celtic Church, p. 16, where I discuss this point and refer to Proceedings of Royal Irish Academy, vol. ii. 184–190; v. 199; vi. 442, 525; John Scott Porter in the Ulster Journal of Archaeology, 1854, pp. 182–191; and Hübner’s Brit. Ins. in Corp. Ins. Lat. tom. vii., p. 221, No. 1198.) As soon as the Romans abandoned Britain, the Antrim Celts established the kingdom of Dalriada, in Argyleshire, which became the root out of which sprang the mediæval kingdom of Scotland. (G. T. Stokes.)

7. The Book of Armagh says, ‘villulam enim prope habuit ubi ego capturam dedi.’ In the Bollandist edition it is ‘villam enim (Enon) prope habuit ubi ego in capturam decidi.’ Archdeacon Hamilton incorrectly renders this ‘near the village of Enon where I was made captive.’ If the reading of the Bollandist copy be correct, we might conjecture that St. Patrick’s father gave the name Enon to his farm because of its abundance of water (comp. John iii. 23).

8. The date of Patrick's first captivity cannot be exactly determined, but the known facts of history all coincide with his own statements. The last half of the fourth century was marked by continual ravages of the English coasts by the Picts and Scots, or Irish, as the word Scot in those days always signified. Ammianus Marcellinus the historian, and the poet Claudian were contemporaries of the incursions. They both testify to the vigour with which the Irish desolated the English coasts. In A.D. 343 they began the conflict. In A.D. 360 they kept possession of a great portion of Britain for ten years, till overthrown and repelled by Theodosius, the most celebrated Roman general of the day, in A.D. 369. On this occasion the Irish were commanded by an Irish king named Crimthann. Claudian the poet speaks of 'Icy Ierne,' weeping for the heaps of those slain in that campaign. The Annals of the Four Masters tell us that in A.D. 405, Niall of the Nine Hostages was slain at Boulogne, after a life spent in such ravages. See Keating's History of Ireland, ed. O'Mahony, pp. 369-390; Ussher's Works, vi. 116. (G. T. Stokes.)

9. Compare what St. Patrick says here as to his ignorance of God in the days of his youth with the similar statement made in the end of this chapter at p. 50, that he was 'like a stone lying in deep mud,' and with the more detailed account of his irreligion, § 12, p. 58, and § 15, p. 61. These statements are in direct contradiction to the legendary stories which make him out a marvel of sanctity and a worker of miracles from his very infancy.

10. The Latin is here 'sacerdotibus nostris.'

11. The phrase seems taken from 2 Chron. xxix. 10, where, however, the Vulgate Latin has furorem iræ suæ, in place of the words quoted by Patrick, iram animationis suæ, which, however, agree in sense with the Vulgate. The Itala rendering of the passage in 2 Chron. is not extant. Hennessy and others have, however, translated the phrase 'the anger of His Spirit.'

12. Archdeacon Hamilton has 'amongst the Gentiles.' The Latin is simply 'in gentibus multis,' which does not convey that idea.

13. Lat. 'parvitas mea.' Archdeacon Hamilton, somewhat too strongly, 'my unworthiness.'

14. Lat. 'sensum incredulitatis meæ' (Book of Armagh). The Bollandists have 'sensum incredulitatis cordis mei.' Archdeacon Hamilton, freely, 'the ears of my incredulous heart.'

15. So Dr. Whitley Stokes reads ut converterem. The Cottonian MS. (*converte*re) is ‘and that I might be converted.’ The Armagh MS. is ut confirmarem, ‘that I might strengthen.’

16. Archdeacon Hamilton, too freely, ‘had compassion on the ignorance of my youth.’ Our translation is literal.

17. The Cottonian MS. has ‘admonished.’ So the Bollandists whom Hamilton has followed.

18. Patrick had evidently here in his mind, as may be seen from the Latin, the passage in Psa. cvii. 15 (cvi. 15, Douay Version), Confiteantur . . . mirabilia ejus. The Vulg. and the Itala here are alike.

19. Lat. ‘præter Deum Patrem ingenitum.’ Not as Hamilton, ‘except our unbegotten God, the Father.’

20. The Armagh MS. has inerrabiliter, which means ‘unerringly,’ but as Prof. O’Mahony suggested, and the suggestion is adopted by Hennessy, it was probably intended for inenarrabiliter, which is the reading of the Bodleian MS., ‘ineffably,’ or ‘inexplicably.’ Sir S. Ferguson translates: ‘in wise unspeakable.’

21. The words ‘and invisible’ are omitted in the Book of Armagh.

22. According to the Armagh MS. the sentence reads ‘death having been vanquished, in the heavens.’ But the text is evidently defective. The Cottonian and Bodleian MSS. and the Bollandist have as above.

23. ‘And under the earth,’ Lat. ‘et infernorum,’ as in the Vulgate, which is translated in the Douay ‘and under the earth.’ Hence our version. Hamilton has ‘and in hell.’ After the words, ‘above every name,’ the words, ‘that in the name of Jesus every knee shall bow,’ are inserted in brackets by Whitley Stokes without any note as to the MS. which gives that addition. Olden inserts them in his translation. But they are omitted in the Cottonian MS. and in the Bollandist text, and it would seem also in the Armagh MS.

24. ‘To Him’ is added in the Book of Armagh. We have marked with inverted commas the portions of the verses quoted (Phil. ii. 9-11) which agree with the Vulgate, and are translated in the Douay. The text, as a whole, differs from both the Vulgate and the Itala. Some MSS. follow the Vulgate in the last clause, reading: ‘that the Lord Jesus Christ is in the glory of God the Father.’

25. Rom. ii. 6. Patrick agrees substantially with the Vulgate, which has opera ejus; Patrick, ungrammatically, facta sua.

26. So the text should be rendered: ‘et effudit in nobis habunde Spiritum Sanctum donum et pignus immortalitatis.’ The first part of this sentence is taken from Titus iii. 6, with the ungrammatical alteration of in nobis instead of in nos.

27. The Bollandists add ‘the Father,’ followed naturally by Hamilton.

28. The Creed of Patrick differs in form from the Nicene Creed, so does the Irish Creed found in the Antiphonary of Bangor, reprinted in O’Laverty’s Diocese of Down and Connor. In the fourth century the forms of the Creed varied very much. The early custom of preserving the creeds by memory alone tended to increase such variations. (G. T. Stokes.)

29. Psa. l. 15 (Psa. xlix. 15, Douay Version). Patrick’s quotation is not from the Vulgate Version, though there is no substantial difference made thereby in the sense of the passage. The Itala is nearer Patrick’s text, reading et magnificabis me, but it also differs from Patrick, for it has eripiam for liberabo.

30. Tobit xii. 7. The quotation is identical with the passage in the Vulgate.

31. Lat. ‘scire qualitatem meam.’ Hamilton renders too freely, ‘should be made acquainted with my circumstances.’

32. Psa. v. 6 (Psa. v. 7, Douay Version). In the Vulgate the word ‘all’ is found in place of ‘those.’ The Itala here agrees with Patrick. Some MSS. of Patrick agree with the Vulgate.

33. Some MSS. omit ‘says in the Gospel.’

34. Matthew xii. 36. The Vulgate and Itala correctly, following the original Greek, have ‘every idle word.’ So Hamilton; but the text of St. Patrick is as in our translation.

35. The Book of Armagh has ‘Domini Christi.’ The Bollandists read, ‘Domini nostri Jesu Christi,’ which Hamilton follows.

36. That is, ‘I feared their censure.’ So Sir S. Ferguson, and Archdeacon Hamilton, ‘I feared I would encounter the reproaches of men.’ The clause has, however, been explained otherwise. Dr. Whitley Stokes renders in a note: ‘I feared offending against (doing violence to) the language of men,’ i.e., that I could not express myself like others.

37. We have followed here Sir S. Ferguson’s translation—

Who, excellently versed in civic law,
And sacred letters, in a like degree.

The original is ungrammatical, and therefore obscure. O’Conor supposed the ‘in both ways’ to refer to the knowledge of both the Greek original and the Latin Version, and so Nicholson. The Armagh MS. has ‘quia non dedici sicut et cæteri qui optime itaque jure et sacras literas utroque pari modo combiberunt et sermones illorum ex infantia numquam motarunt.’ The Bollandists have quin non legi, sicut cæteri qui optime sacris litteris sunt imbuti, et studium suum ex infantia nunquam mutaverunt,' which appears to be a correction of the original, and which Hamilton translates freely, 'not being educated as others, who were very learned in the sacred Scriptures, and who have never changed their studious condition since infancy.'

38. That is, his Latin was always growing worse by his being obliged constantly to speak in Irish.

39. Ex salive (saliva) scriptureæ meæ. Hamilton, incorrectly, 'from the context of my writing.'

40. So, after Sir S. Ferguson, we render in sermonibus. Nicholson translates 'in languages.' Hennessy has 'in speech.' Hamilton 'in my conversations.'

41. Ecclesiasticus iv. 29. The Vulgate and Itala are somewhat fuller here: 'For by the tongue wisdom is discerned, and understanding and knowledge and learning by the word of the wise.' (Douay Version.) The last clause in the Vulgate is et doctrina in verbo sensati. Some MSS. read varietatis, 'of variety,' in place of veritatis.

42. That is, what use is it to plead my deficiencies when I have still the presumption to become an author in spite of them? The Book of Armagh has 'sed quid prodest excussatio,' &c. The Bollandist text omits quid, though it preserves the interrogation at end. Hamilton, not regarding the latter, renders 'but defence is profitable if true, especially when one has anything to presume upon.'

43. The Bollandists and the Cottonian MS. read, 'my sins prevented me,' and so Hamilton. The meaning is as Olden translates, 'circumstances prevented me.' In the end of the sentence the Cottonian MS. reads, 'quod ante non perlegeram.' The insertion of the non is incorrect, though adopted by Olden.

44. That is, scarcely above childish language. So the Armagh MS., the Bodleian MS., and the Bollandist, puer in verbis. Nicholson reads, after the Cottonian MS., puer imberbis, 'a beardless boy ;' and so Hamilton.

45. The clause vel quid adpeterem is omitted by Nicholson, and passed over by Hennessy.

46. We follow here the Cottonian MS., correcting, with Dr. Whitley Stokes, desertis into desertus.

47. The original can scarcely be rendered as Sir S. Ferguson—

With brevity and elegance of speech,
To treat deep things, as, how the Spirit moves,
The soul's affections, and the human mind.

For the original of the latter clause is: Sicut enim spiritus gestit et animas (animus) et sensus monstrat affectus. Hennessy renders : ‘as the spirit desires, and the mind and intellect point out,’ but that rendering ignores affectus.

48. The reference is to Isa. xxxii. 4, where the Latin Vulgate, following the Hebrew, has ‘and the tongue of stammerers shall speak readily (velociter) and plain.’ (Douay Version.) The Itala is nearer to Patrick, linguae balbutientium cito discent loqui pacem. Hamilton corrects the quotation after the Vulgate.

49. The text quoted is 2 Cor. iii. 3. It is substantially, but not verbally, the same as the Vulgate, which has ‘written in our hearts.’

50. Eccl. vii. 16. Patrick evidently understood by rusticatio ‘rural life,’ with the want of learning which generally accompanies it. Hence Sir S. Ferguson renders the word ‘unlearning.’ Hamilton renders ‘simplicity,’ forgetful of the sense of the passage in Eccles. vii.

51. Nicholson and others read as above, following the Cottonian MS., and the Bollandists who read in summo pariete. Hennessy, after the Armagh MS., reads in sua parte, ‘in His part.’

52. Vos dominicati, which is the reading of the Armagh MS., is rendered by Sir S. Ferguson, ‘you lords of the land.’ But Dr. Whitley Stokes prefers the reading of the Bodleian MS., et vos Domini ignari rhetorici. Hennessy renders ‘and ye of the Lord.’ Nicholson reads et vos ignari Domini, ‘and ye ignorant of the Lord,’ and so the Bollandists.

53. The Cottonian MS. adds ‘I should serve’ (prodessem). The verb is omitted in the Armagh MS.

54. The Armagh reading is si vivus fuero, ‘as long as I shall live.’ But Dr. Whitley Stokes reads, after the Cottonian MS., si dignus fuero, which is given in the margin of the Book of Armagh.

55. Instead of ‘et naturaliter deservirem illis,’ which is the reading of the Book of Armagh, the Cottonian MS. has the adverb ‘veraciter,’ and the Bollandists read the whole passage, ‘et veraciter deservirem illi in mensura.’ The clause is translated freely from the latter text by Archdeacon Hamilton. ‘Finally, that in all humility and truth I should serve Him [Christ] without end or measure.’

CHAPTER II.

1. The Book of Armagh and the Cottonian MS. commence this paragraph with ‘in mensura,’ which phrase the Bollandist edition connects with the close of the preceding chapter. See note there.

2. Exgallias, usually explained as ‘Gallican,’ but Sir S. Ferguson renders it as above, and so Dr. Whitley Stokes explains it as exagallias, ‘legacies,’ ‘patterns,’ pp. 361, 673.

2b. The Book of Armagh and Cottonian MS. have ‘post erumnas et tantas moles,’ the Bollandist, ‘post ærumnas tantæ molis.’ Hence Hamilton’s translation, ‘after so many changes of such magnitude.’

3. The Latin is pecora, the meaning of which is doubtful. According to the Tripartite Life, Patrick was employed feeding swine.

4. Patrick’s place of captivity was close to the village of Broughshane, five miles from Ballymena. He lived in a valley near the Hill of Slemish, now called the Valley of the Braid, from the river which flows through it. There is a townland in the valley still called Ballyligpatrick, or the town of Patrick’s Hollow. In this are still some remains of an Irish chieftain’s rath, or fort. See Reeves’ Antiquities of Down and Connor, pp. 83, 84. (G. T. Stokes.)

5. There was a frequent commerce by ships between Ireland and France in those early centuries. Columbanus in the sixth century was placed on board a ship of Nantes, bound for Ireland, by order of Queen Brunehault. Bishop Arculf, about A.D. 690, escaped from Iona in a ship which traded to France. See Ireland and the Celtic Church, pp. 99, 142. (G. T. Stokes.)

6. Lat. intermissi hominem. Hamilton renders, ‘met the man,’ but such a rendering does not suit the context.

7. This was Milchu, son of Hua Bain, King of North Dalriadia. There were two districts of Antrim, one called Dalriada, now corrupted into the word Route, embracing the glens of Antrim; another called Dalaradia, forming the centre of the county. Milchu is said to have burned himself to death when Patrick came to preach the gospel to him. See the Patrician History in the Book of Armagh, as printed in the Analeæta Bollandiana, i. 559, by Rev. E. Hogan, S.J. (G. T. Stokes.)

8. Hamilton has, ‘and in the power of God, he directed my course till I came to Benum.’ But, according to the Bollandist text, the ‘in virtute Dei’ should be connected with the ‘veni ad Benum.’ Upon this name many theories have been raised as to the special locality where Patrick took ship. All the MSS., however, including the Book of Armagh, the Cottonian, and Bodleian, read ad bonum, which is translated in our text. Sir S. Ferguson compares the Irish expression go maith.

9. So the Book of Armagh, reading ut abirem unde navigarem, but the Cottonian MS. has ut haberem unde navigarem, which would mean, ‘I told them that I had the wherewith to sail with them,’ that is, that I could pay for my passage. Hamilton translates the Bollandist text, 'I asked for the means to set sail.' The probability is that Patrick told his dream to the sailors in order to induce the captain to take him on board.

10. So Bodleian MS., reading cum indignatione. The Book of Armagh reads cum interrogacione.

11. The Book of Armagh and the Cottonian MS. have 'quia ex fide recipimus te.' The Bollandists have 'quia ex fide reperimus te.' which Hamilton translates, 'Come, for we have found thee faithful.'

12. The original is itaque repuli sugere (Gilbert reads fugere) mammellas eorum. Dr. Whitley Stokes (pp. 362, 666) compares Isa. ix. 16. This is, however, scarcely possible, though supported by Olden. The Cottonian MS. reads itaque repuli fugere, omitting the rest of the sentence. The Bollandist has et in illa die debui surgere in navem eorum propter Dcum, but in the note it adds that the MS. had repuli sugere mammas eorum. The Bodleian MS. has itaque repulis fugire mammas. Archdeacon Hamilton's translation, based upon the Bollandist edition, is not very clear. It is thus rendered and punctuated : 'Upon that day I entered their ship. On account of God, nevertheless, I had no hopes that they would say to me, "Come to us in the faith of Christ," because they were Gentiles.' The Latin gentes is evidently used in this passage in the sense of heathen.

13. We have followed Sir S. Ferguson's rendering. It is difficult to understand what is meant by the Latin et ob hoc obtinui cum illis, which gives no sense when rendered literally. Hennessy paraphrases : 'and this I obtained from them.' The other translations depart more widely from the text.

14. The Armagh MS. omits 'and we sailed immediately.'

15. The Bollandist edition has twenty-seven, Hamilton's thirty-seven is probably a mere typographical mistake. Compare this statement about the twenty-eight days' journey through a desert with that in second paragraph of chap. iii. p. 56. The two accounts seem somewhat mixed up together.

16. The life and writings of Gregory of Tours clearly prove that Paganism extensively prevailed in Gaul between A.D. 400 and 600. Even amongst Christians their conversion was very imperfect. Many Pagan customs even still survive in our midst. It was the same in the East. In the sixth century a strong Pagan party still existed in Constantinople, some interesting notices of which are to be found in the Ecclesiastical History of John of Ephesus, translated from the Syriac by Dr. R. Payne Smith, Dean of Canterbury. (G. T. Stokes.)

17. Other MSS. 'with faith and the whole heart.'

18. The words 'this day' are not in Hennessy's text, which gives the Armagh reading, but they are in the Cottonian and Bollandist texts. In the sentence following the Bollandists have nobis and in viam nostram, which is expressed in Hamilton's translation.

19. Hamilton incorrectly, 'until we are comforted.'

20. The words 'fainted and' are supplied from the Cottonian MS.

21. The Book of Armagh omits 'from that day forth they had food in abundance ;' but the words are found in the Bollandist text, and in the Cottonian and Bodleian MSS.

22. In the Brussels codex of Muirchu's Life of St. Patrick there is a strange construction put upon this statement which shows how easily the simplest story can be transformed into the miraculous. 'But the holy Patrick tasting nothing of this food, for it was offered in sacrifice, being neither hungry nor thirsty, remained unharmed.' See Hogan's Analecta Bollandiana, tom. i., and the Rolls Trifpartite, p. 494. The sequel of the story shows, however, plainly that Patrick did suffer from partaking of the pork after his long hunger, and had a nightmare in consequence of that repast.

23. It is evident from the context that Satan is here the subject of the verb, and therefore that the passage should be rendered as in our text. Hamilton renders it, 'for there fell upon me as it were, a huge piece of rock.'

24. We have followed here substantially Sir S. Ferguson's translation. He connects the words et nihil membrorum prævalens sed unde mihi venit in spiritum, observing that the Latin sed is used after the analogy of the Irish acht as equivalent to nisi, a usage elsewhere found in the Confessio.

25. Helias has been explained by Dr. Todd as equivalent to Eli, the Hebrew for 'my God,' which occurs in the Gospel account of the Crucifixion, Matt. xxvii. 45; Mark xv. 34. Others, as Probus, the author of the Fifth Life of Patrick, consider the word to have been the Greek Helios, 'the sun,' and that Patrick 'invoked Christ, the true Sun.' Helios and Helias were associated at an early period (see Whitley Stokes, p. 669). Others, with Jocelin, explain the passage to mean that Patrick invoked the aid of the prophet Elias or Elijah; but that is far-fetched. The contrast between the sun and Christ is alluded to in the end of the Confession, p. 71.

26. Some MSS. Helias! Helias!

27. The words 'I was aided' and 'His Spirit was then' are omitted in the Armagh MS., but they are found in other MSS., and are needed to complete the sense.

28. Matt. x. 20. There are unimportant variations here in the MSS. Some do not give the whole verse.

CHAPTER III.

1. Sir S. Ferguson maintains that the Latin iterum post annos multos adhuc capturam dedi ea nocte prima, especially the use of adhuc, ‘still,’ shows that these words are necessarily to be understood of a spiritual captivity, a captivity still continuing. ‘It was the first occasion on which he had experienced what he conceived to be the presence of an indwelling coercer of his will, to obedience to whose promptings all his subsequent life was to be conformed.’ (Ferguson, pp. 113, 114.) Others consider a second actual captivity to be here referred to. Hamilton translates ‘I was again made captive by the Gentiles,’ but the words ‘by the Gentiles’ are not in any of the MSS.

2. The Armagh MS. omits ‘saying to me.’

3. Some MSS. ‘we came to men,’ reading ad homines, instead of omnes, which is followed by Olden.

4. Some MSS. read here also ad homines for omnes.

5. The order of the first two paragraphs is reversed in the Bollandist edition, where the second paragraph of our chap. iii. is placed at the end of chap. ii.

6. ‘Amongst the Britons’: in Britannis, as in the Irish gloss on Fiacc, in bretnaib. (Sir S. Ferguson.) Patrick wrote ‘in the Britains.’ This was strictly accurate, and is an interesting little proof of the genuineness of our document. The correct designation among the Romans for Britain was Britanniae, because it was divided in the fourth century, the age of Patrick’s youth, into five provinces; Britannia Prima, Britannia Secunda, Maxima Cæsariensis, Flavia Cæsariensis, and Valentia the fifth province. The last was organised by Theodosius after he repelled the Irish invaders. It comprised the extreme northern portion of the Roman dominions and embraced South-western Scotland. (G. T. Stokes.)

7. The wood of Foclut. The wood here mentioned by Patrick was, as Mr. Olden has noted, situated in and near the parish of Killala, barony of Tirawley, and county of Mayo. Compare the remarks of the Rev. E. Hogan, S.J., in his Analecta Bollandiana, ii. 42, and O’Donovan’s Hy-Fiachrach, pp. 463, 464. (G. T. Stokes.)

8. ‘As if with one voice,’ is omitted in the Book of Armagh.

9. The Bollandist edition has in me, an juxta me verbis peritissimis andiebam quosdam ex spiritu psallentes intra me, et nesciebam qui essent quos andievi: ‘I heard within me, or beside me, some persons singing from the spirit within me the most eloquent words, and I knew not who they were whom I heard.’ But this reading does not agree with the close of the passage in which the singular is used as in our translation. Archdeacon

Hamilton has in his translation rendered the latter words in the plural. But this is not in accordance with the Bollandist text. The plural quos before audiwi is found in some MSS., but not the phrase ex spiritu psallentes intra me.

10. The Bollandist edition omits the words ‘is He who speaks in thee’ (ipse est qui loquitur in te). And so consequently Hamilton.

11. The phrase ‘full of joy’ (gandibundus) is omitted in the Bollandist edition, and so by Hamilton.

12. The Bollandists read audiwi, ‘I heard,’ instead of vidi, ‘I saw,’ as in the other MSS.

13. Hennessy and Gilbert, with Cottonian and other MSS., read eram. Dr. Whitley Stokes, with the Bollandists, has erat.

14. The Armagh MS. omits ‘above me.’

15. Lat. super interiorem hominem, not ‘within my inner man,’ as Hamilton.

16. The Bollandists have dixit se esse spiritum, rendered by Hamilton ‘he said he was a spirit.’ It ought to be the Spirit. The Armagh and other MSS. ‘sic effatus est ut sit eps,’ i.e., episcopus. Others have sps., spiritus. These contractions are easily, as Dr. Todd says, confounded in the MSS. If the former be the true reading, the meaning seems to be that he spoke with authority as the great ‘bishop of souls’ (1 Pet. ii. 25). The reference must be either to Christ or the Spirit.

17. The quotation is from Rom. viii. 26, and agrees with the Vulgate and Douay, save that the expression ‘the infirmities of our prayers’ (some MSS. have the sing. ‘infirmity’) is used instead of ‘our infirmity.’

18. Or ‘which I cannot express in words.’ So Bollandists.

19. Probably a quotation compounded from 1 John ii. 1, and Rom. viii. 34.

20. This paragraph, with the first paragraph of § 12 and the two first lines of the second, which we have placed within brackets, are not found in the Book of Armagh, but are contained in the Cottonian MS., the Bollandist, and the Bodleian texts.

21. The Latin is quia necdum prevalebam, which Hamilton incorrectly translates ‘for as yet I had no understanding.’

22. We have followed the Cottonian MS. in connecting et quotidie with the preceding sentence, and making the new sentence commence with contra used as an adverb. Hamilton, closely following the Bollandist edition (which here agrees with the Cottonian, the passage not being in the Book of Armagh, see note 20), translates ‘and daily proceeded, though not willingly, towards Ireland, until I nearly fainted away.’ But the passage so punctuated affords no good sense.

23. Hamilton refers to Rom. viii. 28, which is a good reference, although there is no quotation here made from that passage.

24. Lat. a memoratis superditis, which Hamilton renders ‘by my above-mentioned censors.’

25. So Sir S. Ferguson would render the Latin contra faciem as being equivalent to the Irish in agaid.

26. Some MSS. ‘divine response.’ And so Hamilton translates ‘an answer from the Lord.’

27. So MSS. and the Bollandist edition, but the Armagh MS. reads audivimus, which is opposed to the male vidi mus in the following clause. Male is generally rendered ‘with displeasure.’ Sir S. Ferguson points out that Facciolati gives examples of the phrase in the sense of ‘to be ill-styled.’ Archdeacon Hamilton translates the sentence, ‘we have imperfectly seen the face of him who was marked out to us, and whose name was discovered,’ thus rendering male by ‘imperfectly,’ and so in the following sentences.

28. That is ‘of the Bishop-designate.’ The ‘name stripped’ of honour means, according to the Bollandists, without any title of honour or mark of episcopal dignity.

29. Zech. ii. 8. The quotation is slightly different from the Vulgate version, and also from the Itala.

30. ‘In myself’ is inserted by the Cottonian and Bodleian MSS.

31. The Bollandist edition omits hic et in futurum, ‘now or for the future.’

32. The three paragraphs that follow to the end of the chapter are enclosed in brackets, because wanting in the Book of Armagh. They occur in the Cottonian MS. and other MSS.

33. Lat. ante defensionem illam, which Hamilton strangely renders, ‘before such prohibition.’

34. ‘In the Britains.’ See note 6, p. 134.

35. Cottonian MS., fro me pulsaret; Bollandist edition pulsetur fro me.

35b. The Cottonian MS. reads audenter; Sir S. Ferguson audienter, which he translates ‘audibly.’ The adverb is omitted in the Bollandist text and in the Book of Armagh.

36. The Latin is ‘ita ut hodie confidenter offeram illi sacrificium ut hostiam viventem animam meam Christo Domino meo.’ The reference is to Rom. xii. 1, as is seen by the Latin hostiam viventem, which occurs in Patrick’s original and in the Itala and Vulg. Archdeacon Hamilton translates obscurely, ‘so that daily, with confidence, I offer sacrifice to him, and consecrate my soul a living victim to my Lord.’

37. 2 Sam. vii. 18 (2 Kings vii. 18, Douay Version).

38. Or ‘calling’ (1 Cor. i. 26). The Latin is ‘quæ est vocatio mea?’ Hamilton renders ‘What is my dessert?’

39. The Cottonian MS. has qui mihi tantam divinitatem cooper-

uisti. The Bollandist reading is qui mihi tantam d:vinitatem denu-dasti. Hamilton's rendering is 'that you should have showered such graces on me.'

40. The Bollandist edition omits the words 'in gentibus constanter,' which are therefore not in Hamilton's translation.

41. There seems to be a reference here to Rom. xv. 9.

42. We here followed Sir S. Ferguson in supposing indubitabilem eum to refer to God. So Hamilton, who renders it by 'faithful.' Hennessy refers it to Patrick, rendering 'undoubtedly'; so Olden, and similarly Nicholson, who loosely renders the clause: 'That I should place no bounds to my trust in Him.'

43. Hamilton has accidentally omitted to translate the words 'et qui me andierit,' which are found in the Bollandist as well as in the Cottonian copy.

44. Matt. xxiv. 14. The clause 'before the end of the world' does not agree with the Itala or Vulg. versions.

45. Here ends the portion noticed in note 20, as not found in the Book of Armagh.

CHAPTER IV.

1. The Armagh MS. has pissimus, as Gilbert and Whitley Stokes give it. Nicholson, after the Bollandists, piissimus, which Hamilton renders 'God of piety,' and so Olden. Possibly the true reading of the Armagh MS. is pissimus, i.e., potentissimus. So Sir S. Ferguson seems to have read, for he renders the word 'Almighty.'

2. Lat. ex duodecim periculis. Hamilton renders freely 'from the many dangers.' Olden illustrates the expression by quoting the following from the Irish Nennius, p. 112, 'Like seven to the Hebrews, twelve was to the Britons, the absolute number significant of perfection, plenitude, and completeness.'

3. The two paragraphs following, to the end of the first paragraph of § 16, are enclosed in brackets, because they are omitted in the Book of Armagh.

4. The Latin is ut me pauperculum pupillum (the Bollandists have pauperculum et pussilum pupillum) ideo tamen (Bollandists omit ideo tamen) responsum d:vi:rum creberrime admoneret. Hamilton, much too freely, 'admonished me, a poor wretched creature, by his divine revelations.'

5. Psa. xxxix. 4 (Psa. xxxviii. 5, Douay Version).

6. There seems to be a reference here to 1 Cor. xv. 10, but it is not absolutely certain.

7. The Bollandist edition has non ego, sed Dei gratia, and therefore Hamilton, 'not I, but the grace of God,' and so Olden.

8. Lat. ut andirem offrobrium feregrinationis mœ. Hamilton renders much too freely, ‘I heard them upbraid me as a stranger.’

9. Lat. et ut darem ingenuitatem meam. Hamilton incorrectly, ‘and yet I gave myself up without reserve.’ St. Patrick several times alludes to his noble birth and his Roman ancestors, of whom he seems to have been proud. See Confession, chap. i. 1, and Epistle to Coroticus, § 5, p. 76.

10. Here end the brackets noted in note 3. The closing words of the paragraph are in Latin, si Dominus indulgeret, incorrectly rendered by Hamilton, ‘if the Lord should demand it.’ St. Patrick both anticipated and longed for his martyrdom, which proves that the legends are wrong which relate that he converted all Ireland. See Confession, chap. v. §§ 23, 24, pp. 69, 70.

11. Several MSS. add ‘and afterwards consummated,’ i.e., confirmed. Hamilton translates, ‘and be afterwards perfected.’ But the words are not found in the Book of Armagh.

12. Jer. xvi. 19. ‘To thee the Gentiles shall come from the ends of the earth.’ The words, ‘from the ends of the earth,’ are not in the Book of Armagh, and the clauses are there inverted. The passage is somewhat shorter in the Bollandist edition followed by Hamilton. The text quoted does not agree in words with the Vulgate, nor generally with the Itala, which is, however, nearer to Patrick’s quotation, translating quam falsa possederunt patres nostri simulachra et non est in eis utilitas.

13. The text here is almost identical with that in Acts xiii. 47, which is quoted from Isa. xl ix. 6.

14. Matt. viii. 11. The Book of Armagh adds, after ‘west,’ ‘and from the south and from the north.’

15. Some MSS. omit the words ‘as we believe,’ &c.

16. Jer. xvi. 16. The Armagh MS. omits ‘he says by the prophets.’ It adds after ‘the Lord’ the words et cetera.

17. Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. The Book of Armagh omits verse 20, but inserts the word reliqua, which intimates that the latter verse was in the copy which the scribe had before him. See the Rolls Trifartite, p. 369.

18. Mark xvi. 15, 16. Some MSS. omit the last clause, and by the Bollandists, which edition Hamilton translates from.

19. Matt. xxiv. 14. (See note 44, chap. iii.) The Book of Armagh adds here ‘the rest are examples,’ which Sir S. Ferguson is correct in regarding as a note by the scribe, indicating abridgment from a fuller text. So Dr. Whitley Stokes. The Book of Armagh omits all onward to the end of the section.

20. The Bollandist edition omits the clause, ‘and your sons shall see visions,’ and so Hamilton.

21. Rom. ix. 25, 26, where the Apostle quotes from Hosea (Osee) i. 9, 10.

22. Lat. unde autem Hiberione. Hamilton freely, ‘and now with regard to the Irish.’

23. It has been already noted (note 8, chap. i.), that the word Scot always meant Irishman in these early ages. It was only in the twelfth century that it was finally transferred from the inhabitants of Ireland to those of Scotland. The mistake still lingers on, notwithstanding the efforts of scholars. An amusing incident of its prevalence occurred of late years. That eminent Celtic scholar, Mr. W. M. Hennessy, M.R.I.A., published an ancient Irish book of Annals composed at Clonmacnois, about A.D. 1100, styled Chronicon Scotorum. It appeared in the English Rolls Series, and is the only one of that series which is now out of print. This occurred through the fervid patriotism of modern Scotchmen, who purchased it, believing it to be a Scottish and not an Irish history. See on this common error Ussher’s preface to his Sylloge Epist. Hib., and his Eccless. Britan. Antiqu., cap. xvi., Works, vol. vi. p. 276, 281, cf. p. 112; Skene’s Celtic Scotland, i. pp. 137, 398; Keating’s History of Ireland, O’Mahony’s edit., p. 375; Bishop Reeves, Proceedings of Royal Irish Acad. viii. 29; Colgan’s Trias Thaumaturgica, p. 109. (G. T. Stokes.)

24. Guasacht, son of Milchu, the chieftain whose slave Patrick was, became first bishop of Granard in Longford. He is commemorated in the Martyrology of Donegal, on January 24th. Milchu’s two daughters became consecrated virgins. There is a very curious account of the conversion by Patrick of the daughter of King Laoghaire (Leary). It is preserved in the Book of Armagh. [See p. 90 of this edition.] See Father Hogan’s interesting extracts in Analeæta Bollandiana, ii. 49. I have translated the passage in Ireland and the Celtic Church, p. 86. The incident happened at Croghan, in Roscommon, the ancient seat of the Connaught kings. Every one knows, of course, that the institution of monks and nuns living in societies, sprang up in the latter part of the third century. A handy account of the origin of such monastic societies will be found in the article Monasticism in the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica; or in the article Monastery in Smith and Cheetham’s Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. (G. T. Stokes.)

25. From this passage onward to the bracket in § 23 in chap. v., is omitted in the Book of Armagh, but is supplied from the Cottonian and other MSS.

26. So the Cottonian MS. reading una causa. So the Bollandist reading, although Hamilton has omitted the words.

27. A nutu Dei, translated as above by Sir S. Ferguson

Nicholson, Olden, &c. Hennessy renders simply ‘from God.’ The Bollandist text has a nuntio Dei.

28. The Cottonian MS. is ut esset virgo Christi, et ipsa Deo proximaret, which we have translated. The Bollandists read ut permaniceret virgo Christi, et sic Deo proximaret. Hamilton renders the latter ‘who advised her to remain a virgin of Christ, and thus draw near to God.’

29. Lat. simply illud. Hamilton paraphrases, ‘that grace.’

30. The meaning of the Latin expression de genere nostro is somewhat obscure; probably the reference is to his converts as his spiritual children.

31. Compare 2 Tim. iv. 18, but that passage is not directly cited here.

32. Lat. a fide. Hamilton, incorrectly, ‘from my purpose.’

33. Rom. viii. 7. Patrick uses caro inimica; the Vulgate, sapientia carnis inimica.

34. The Cottonian MS. has quare vitam perfectam ego non egi. The Bollandist edition has quod ego vitam perfectam non dedici, curiously rendered by Hamilton ‘that I have not studied eternal life.’

35. 2 Tim. iv. 8. The Latin is fidem servavi.

CHAPTER V.

1. The Latin is novit omnia etiam ante tempora secularia. The last phrase occurs in the Vulg. of 2 Tim. i. 9, whence Archdeacon Hamilton gives a reference to that passage. But the passage in Acts xv. 18 is on the whole nearer in meaning, although not quoted here with verbal accuracy.

2. Hamilton considers there is some gap here in the narrative, but the supposition is unnecessary.

3. Lat. in milia milium. Hamilton renders ‘on account of many thousands.’

4. Literally ‘on account of my rusticity.’ The Latin is propter rusticitatem meam.

5. The Cottonian MS. has nunc mihi capit. The Bollandist has nunc mihi sapit, rendered by Hamilton ‘it is delightful for me.’

6. The Latin is utinam ut et vos imitemini majora, et potiora faciatis, doubtfully rendered by Hamilton ‘would to God that you would imitate me in holier things and do them more wisely.’

7. Prov. x. 1; xv. 20, but the Vulgate rendering is there, ‘a wise son maketh the father glad.' The Itala version of the passage is not extant.

8. Compare 1 Thess. ii. 10, but the passage is only referred to, not quoted.

9. The words are ego fidem illis præstavi (Cott. MS., præstasti) et præstabō. Hennessy renders: 'I have given the faith to them, and I will continue to do so.' And similarly Hamilton.

10. See Lev. xxiv. 16, but only the substance and not the words of that text is quoted. The words of the Apostle in Rom. ii. 24 were also evidently in Patrick's mind.

11. So the Book of Armagh reads in nominibus. Other MSS. in omnibus, 'in all things,' and so Hamilton and Olden. Sir S. Ferguson follows, however, the former reading, translating 'in words.'

12. Lat. ultronea munuscula.

12b. 'The screpall was an ancient Celtic coin, value about threepence, weighing twenty-four grains. See Petrie's Round Towers, p. 214.' (Hennessy.) There is evidently a reference to 1 Sam. xii. 3; 1 Kings xii. 3 (Douay Version).

13. When Patrick made his first journey into Connaught, he bargained for a safe conduct with Endeus, a chief, from the plain of Domnon, near the wood of Fochlut, near Killala, in Mayo. See Tirechán's account of this incident in the Book of Armagh, printed by Father Hogan in Analefa Bollandiana, ii. 42. Patrick on that occasion paid the price of fifteen slaves for the services of Endeus. (G. T. Stokes.)

14. The Latin et nihil comprehendenterunt me can scarcely be explained with Hennessy to mean 'and who understood nothing but (to protect) me.' For, as Hennessy states in his note, Villanueva reads correctly nihilominus instead of nihil. Nihil must have been understood in the sense of nihilominus by Patrick. The Bollandists also read nihilominus.

15. These judges were Brehons. The Brehon law lasted in force till the reign of James I. The Brehon laws have been published by the Government under the guidance of eminent Celtic scholars like Dr. O'Donovan, Mr. O'Curry, Drs. Ritchie and O'Mahony. Dr. Atkinson, of Trinity College, Dublin, is now at work upon the completion of this great work. Sir Henry Maine, in his Ancient Law, chap. x., and in other works, gives an interesting account of the provisions of the curious code to which Patrick here refers. (G. T. Stokes.) The Cottonian MS. has illis qui judicabant, but the Bollandists read eis qui indigebant. Hence Hamilton has, 'how much I bestowed amongst those who were in distress.'

16. The Latin is non minimum quam pretium quindecim hominum

distribui illis. Hamilton quite incorrectly renders the clause ‘I have distributed among these men not less in amount than in value.’

17. Here ends the portion that is added from the Cottonian MS. (See note 25, chap. iv.) The passage quoted is 2 Cor. xii. 15.

18. This clause is added from the Cottonian MS. It is not in the Armagh or Bollandist texts.

19. Some MSS. ‘neither have I written to you that there may be an occasion of praise or gain from you.’

20. So the Book of Armagh, but other MSS. have ‘which is not seen, but is believed with the heart, but faithful is He who promises [and] never lies.’ Comp. Heb. x. 23.

21. There is an allusion here to 2 Cor. xii. 7, but no quotation. The phraseology is not as similar in the Latin as might be inferred from the English.

22. 1 Cor. iv. 3. The words of the Latin of that passage are here quoted, neque meipsum judico. The word dignum is supplied in square brackets [] in the Rolls Tripartite, p. 373, and is supplied, also in brackets, in Nicholson’s text of the Bollandists. But it is quite unnecessary. Hamilton omits the words in his translation.

23. From here to end of the second paragraph in § 25 is omitted in the Book of Armagh.

24. The words are quoted from Acts xx. 24, as is seen from the Latin sed nihil horum vereor.

25. The Cottonian MS. reads ‘because,’ i.e., quia for qui.

26. Psa. lv. 22 (Psa. liv. 23, Douay Version), but the wording is a little different from the Vulgate and the Itala : iac̄ta cogitatum tuum in Dominum, instead of iac̄ta super Dominum curam tuam.

27. Gal. ii. 6, but that passage is only referred to. Comp. Prov. xviii. 5.

28. Psa. cxvi. 12 (Psa. cxv. 12, Douay Version).

29. Dr. Whitley Stokes gives nihil valeo as the reading of the Cottonian MS. This is the reading also of the Bollandists. Other MSS. nihil video, ‘I see nothing.’

30. Other MSS. read : ‘to lose his people whom I have gained.’ Dr. Whitley Stokes notes that in the Armagh MS. suam is written over meam.

31. Lat. lucratus sum animam cum corpore meo. The context shows that St. Patrick refers to the resurrection, and therefore Hamilton’s translation is incorrect, ‘that by the loss of my body I should save my soul.’

32. Hosea i. 10. The Cottonian MS. has ‘the Son of God.’

33. The last clause ‘for of Him,’ &c., is omitted in the Cottonian MS., but is found in two MSS.

34. Lat. neque permanebit splendor ejus. Hamilton renders ‘and its splendour shall be dimmed.’

35. Lat. in pœnam miseri male devenient. Therefore Hamilton’s translation is too strong, ‘shall perish unceasingly for all eternity.’

36. Lat. solem verum Iesum Christum. Not, as Hamilton, ‘Jesus Christ the true Sun of Justice.’

37. Lat. interibit, not, as Hamilton, ‘never shall go down.’

38. Some MSS. omit ‘as Christ continues for ever.’

39. Compare 1 Tim. v. 21, although that passage is not quoted, but imitated here.

40. Here end the paragraphs inserted from the Bodleian MSS., but not found in the Book of Armagh.

41. The Armagh MS. omits ‘the will of God.’

42. Hennessy has the following note on this paragraph: ‘This sentence is separate from the text in the Book of Armagh, but seems written by the same hand.—T.O’M. [Thaddeus O’Mahony]. Ware does not give it, but quotes it in a note.’

THE EPISTLE TO COROTICUS.

1. The title of this Epistle in Dr. Whitley Stokes’ work is ‘The Epistle of St. Patrick to the Christian subjects of the tyrant Coroticus.’

2. Coroticus was a Welsh prince. Some twenty years ago a pillar was discovered in Wales, with the name Coroticus in Latin and Ogham. Some have identified this with the name of Patrick’s correspondent. (G. T. Stokes.)

3. The reference is to 1 John iii. 15, but there is no direct quotation. Patrick writes in morte vivunt, while the New Testament phrase is manet in morte.

4. The Picts inhabited Scotland, and were also scattered over the north of Ireland. Comgall of Bangor and Canice of Kilkenny were Irish Picts. Columba was a Scot; he summoned Comgall, the founder of Bangor, and Canice, to help him in preaching the Gospel to the Scottish Picts, recognising the fact that community in blood and language is a great help towards persuasion. There is a tradition that the Picts of Scotland accepted Christianity before Patrick’s day, but soon fell away again into Paganism. Hence Patrick calls them apostate Piets. See Bede, Hist. Eccles. iii. 4; Ussher, vi. 200, 210. (G. T. Stokes.)

5. The early Christians always wore white robes in church after their baptism, and were anointed at their baptism and at their confirmation. The Gallican and Irish Churches of Patrick's time used only one unction, either at baptism or confirmation. The Roman Church used unction on both occasions. This was one of the great points of difference between Augustine and the Celtic Church of Britain, in the seventh century. See Hefele's History of Councils, iii. 160 (Clark's Translation). There is a reference to these baptismal customs in the story about the conversion of King Leary's daughters at the well of Croghan referred to in note 24, chap. iv. (G. T. Stokes.) See the story on p. 90 ff.

6. John viii. 34. The correct text is, 'Whosoever committeth sin is the servant (slave) of sin.' See also verse 44.

7. Almost after Psa. xiv. 4 (Psa. xiii. 4, Douay Version.) Patrick's version agrees with neither the Vulgate nor Itala.

8. Psa. cxix. 126 (Psa. cxviii. 126, Douay Version.)

9. Dr. Whitley Stokes inserts as above al'ena, sed within brackets. The reference is to 2 Cor. x. 15.

10. Matt. xviii. 18, though the quotation is not exact. We cannot agree here with Patrick's interpretation, and may repeat what we have elsewhere written on the subject. The power given to the Church (John xx. 23) seems to have been simply to declare, by the preaching of the Gospel, forgiveness to all who would believe in Christ. Our Lord's words were not addressed on that occasion especially or entirely to the apostles, since one apostle was not present, namely, Thomas (John xx. 24); and several who were not apostles, such as Cleophas and his companion (Luke xxiv. 33-36),—and probably the holy women also,—were in the assembly to which our Lord addressed the words recorded in John xx. 23. The substance of the commission then given to the Church is given in general terms in Luke xxiv. 47. (See also Mark xvi. 16.) According to the usage of Scripture prophets are frequently said to do themselves that which they were commanded to announce that God would bring to pass. (See 1 Kings xix. 17; Jer. i. 10; Hosea vi. 5; Rev. xi. 5, 6.) The power of binding and loosing, which Patrick here refers to, given to Peter (Matt. xvi. 19), and to the other apostles as representatives of the Church (Matt. xviii. 18), was that of declaring by the power of the Holy Ghost what ordinances of the law of Moses were binding on Christians, and what had ceased to be so. It is well known that in the phraseology of the Jews, which was common in our Lord's day, to bind means to declare prohibited, and to loose is to declare lawful or permitted. See Lightfoot, Horæ Hebraicæ. Instances of the exercise of such power are given in Acts xv. 28, 29; Rom. xiv. 5, 6, 14, 17, 20; 1 Cor. viii.; Gal. v. 1, 2; Col. ii. 16, 17.

11. The quotation is from Eccl. xxxiv. 23, 24. It coincides with the Vulgate and Itala, save that the word reprobat in the first verse is used in place of non probat, which we have indicated by substituting 'reprobates' for the Douay 'approveth not.'

12. The quotation is from Job xx. 15, 16, but it is only a loose paraphrase with peculiar additions; the Latin is most ungrammatical.

13. The quotation is from Hab. ii. 6, but is not exact, though Patrick approximates nearer to the Itala than to the Vulgate.

14. A summary of the commandment in Exod. xx. 17. Compare Rom. xiii. 9.

15. 1 John iii. 14. The words 'his brother,' though omitted in the Vulg. and Itala (followed, of course, by the Douay Version) are yet found in this passage in many Greek MSS.

16. That is 'by our humble exhortations.'

17. Note the imitation here of 2 Cor. i. 15-17.

18. Dr. Whitley Stokes gives the reading of the Cottonian MS., Numquid amo piam misericordiam quod ago erga gentem, which is translated above. Hennessy gives the reading of that MS. to be Numquid a me piam misericordiam quod ago, &c., which would be, 'Was it from myself that pious compassion which I exhibit towards,' &c.

19. Decurions formed what we might call the local town councils in every small town and village about the year A.D. 400. The notice of this office constitutes an interesting incidental proof of the authenticity of this Epistle. I have given in my Ireland and the Celtic Church, p. 37, a full explanation of the office and many references to foreign works on the subject, which need not here be repeated. The same title Decurio, used here by Patrick, occurs twice in Hübner's volume of British Latin Inscriptions, Nos. 54 and 189. If the Epistle to Coroticus had been forged even a century later, the forger would have known nothing of 'decurions,' as the barbarian invaders of the Roman Empire substituted their own local organisation in the villages and smaller towns for that of the Romans. See Stubbs' Constitutional History of England, vol. i. chap. v. (G. T. Stokes.)

On Patrick's noble birth, and the references to it, see Confession, chap. iv. note 9.

20. Quoted from Eccl. xxxiv. 28, but in that place the sentences are reversed, and participles are employed.

21. Compare 2 Cor. xii. 14, which passage evidently was passing through Patrick's mind.

22. See Jer. xvi. 16, compare the Confession, § 17.

23. Quamobrem injuriam justorum non te placeat etiam usque ad inferos non placebit. Dr. Whitley Stokes refers the pronoun te to God, for he adds Domine within brackets. But the sense given in our translation seems to us more natural. Sir S. Ferguson notes : Ad inferos, equivalent to the Irish use of go brath, to the condemnatory judgment, 'for ever.' Nicholson supposes a reference here to Prov. xvii. 15. The Bollandist edition reads 'he who does not appease Thee (Lord) on account of the injury done to the just, even to the lower regions he will not appease Thee.'

24. 'The Franks who invaded and conquered Gaul, and from whom it derives its modern name of France, did not embrace Christianity until A.D. 496, and therefore this Epistle, which speaks of them as still Pagans, must have been written before that date.' (Olden.)

25. So the Cottonian MS. But Nicholson has 'to send holy presbyters, suitable men, to the Franks and foreign nations.'

26. 'The solidus was a gold coin originally worth twenty-five denarii, but in the time of Patrick it was reduced to one-half its value, and was probably worth from seven to eight shillings.' (Olden.)

27. In this passage again we find another undesigned coincidence proving the authenticity of this letter. The Epistle to Coroticus was written when Patrick was now an old man, and after he had laboured for many years. It must have been written in the second half of the fifth century, at which period the northern and eastern part of Gaul were desolated by the invasions of the barbarians. It was then counted a most meritorious work to send contributions to purchase back the Christian captives made by the Pagan invaders. (G. T. Stokes.)

28. This expression seems to have been a common one with Patrick. It occurs again in the Notes of Muirchu (Rolls edition, p. 288) : 'I cannot judge, but God will judge,' Non possum judicare sed Deus judicabit.

29. Rom. i. 32 is here referred to, though not accurately quoted. Hennessy's text omits the Biblical quotation, which is given in the Bollandist text. The previous clause is slightly different in the Bollandist edition.

30. 1 Cor. xii. 26. The quotation, though substantially the same in meaning, agrees with neither the Itala nor the Vulgate.

31. This, if not partly a quotation, as is possible, is modelled after Psa. lxv. 3 (Psa. lxiv. 3, Douay Version). Patrick's words are prævaluit iniquitas iniquorum supra nos; those of the Itala and Vulgate, verba iniquorum prævaluerunt supra nos.

32. Copied from Psa. Ixix. 8 (lviii. 8, Douay Version).

33. Patrick evidently speaks here in the name of his converts. (See the Confession, chap. i. 1, and note 6, p. 125.)

34. The passage in Mal. ii. 10 was evidently here in the saint's mind. He connected the thought there with the saying of the Apostle in Eph. iv. 5, 6. It is noteworthy that he refers later in this paragraph also to Mal. iv. 3, 4.

35. 'In vain,' in vacuum, agreeable to the Irish idiom dul ar nemnid. (Sir S. Ferguson.) Compare Gal. ii. 2; iv. 11.

36. The quotation is composed of phrases from Rev. xxi. 4, 25.

37. Taken from Mal. iv. 3, 4; but the quotation, though substantially the same, does not entirely agree with the Vulgate. It is much nearer to the Itala version, which is: et salietis sicut vituli de vinculis relaxati, et conculcabitis iniquos, et erunt cinis subter pedes vestros. Patrick's version is: exultabitis sicut vituli ex vinculis resoluti, et conculcabitis iniquos, et erunt cinis sub pedibus vestris.

38. Rev. xxii. 15, but the quotation is not exact.

39. Rev. xxi. 8, slightly altered.

40. The passage quoted is 1 Peter iv. 18, but the quotation is a free one.

41. So the Cotton. MS. Nicholson and Sir S. Ferguson, with other MSS., read the whole clause: 'who distribute baptized women and the spoils of orphans among their most depraved satellites.' Dr. Whitley Stokes inserts this in his text within brackets.

42. Nicholson has rendered the clause, quod ego Latinum expesui, as in our version; but in p. 168 of his work he has explained it to mean 'which I have translated into Latin,' and he draws the conclusion from thence that Patrick did not use a Latin translation of the Bible, but translated the passage from the Greek. The conclusion is, however, questionable (see remarks on p. 77), for the Latin may well be interpreted to mean 'which I have explained,' i.e., I have explained in this Epistle the purport of the Scriptures quoted.

43. Psa. Ix. 6 (lix. 8, Douay Version).

THE CONFSSION OF TOURS.

1. The original is here ‘rex regum, dominus dominantium,’ which is an exact quotation (et only being omitted) of the Vulgate rendering of Rev. xix. 16.

2. The phrase here employed, ‘arbiter omnis seculi,’ conveys a deep thought, if we could regard the writer as fully conscious of the difference in meaning between the Latin words ‘arbiter’ and ‘judex,’ the former of which signifies one who gives judgment according to what is right and equitable, the latter, one who judges according to strict law.

3. The expression, ‘magister gentibus,’ here employed is somewhat peculiar.

4. ‘Vita perpetua.’

5. ‘Lætitia in veritate.’

6. ‘Tu es exultatio in æterna patria.’

7. The original is here ‘lux lucis,’ which must be distinguished from the Latin ‘lumen de lumine,’ used as the translation of the expression in the Nicene Creed, φῶς ἐκ φωτός, which conveys the idea of Christ as the Light proceeding from the Father, the fountain of light.

8. 1 Tim. ii. 4, the portion enclosed within inverted commas is identical with the Vulgate translation. Hence we have given the wording of the Rheims translation in the so-called Douay Bible.

9. This is the Douay rendering of Ezek. xviii. 21, as the Latin of the original of the words under quotation marks is identical with the Vulgate of that passage, ‘vita vivet et non morietur.’

10. Lat. ‘in omni corde.’

11. Lat. ‘multiplicata sunt delicta mea super me.’ Such passages as Isa. lix. 12 and Psa. xl. 12 may have been in the writer’s mind, but there is no actual quotation of Scripture.

12. Lat. ‘per nos.’

13. The Latin here is ‘et quod velle nos dicimus, nostris actibus adprobamus.’ M. Berger suggests that nos is a mistake for non. We have followed his suggestion in the translation above, but with some hesitation.

14. The Latin is ‘quia in sacramentis tuis meus sensus infirmus est.’ The words are easy to translate, though the meaning conveyed thereby is not quite clear.

15. Lat. ‘qui ex nobis duro corde verba non suscipit.’

16. The Latin is here at fault. ‘Jhesus Christus Dominus noster’ is in the nominative, and not in the vocative case.

17. The Latin here is faulty, ‘ego peccavi in cælo et in terra et coram te.' The Vulgate in Luke xv. 21 has correctly 'peccavi in cœlum et coram te.'

18. Lat. 'luxoriam' instead of 'luxuriam.'

19. Lat. 'peccavi per fornicationem et per gulam.'

20. Lat. 'peccavi per instabilitatem mentis fidei et per dubietatis impietatem.'

21. Lat. 'peccavi per vagationem et per discretionem mentis meæ.' In late Latin 'discretio' is sometimes used in the meaning of judgment, perhaps here with the idea of straining after matters too high. Comp. Psa. cxxxi.

22. The MS. has 'per observationem.' M. Berger corrects 'per [in]observationem.'

23. The Latin is, 'per amissionem bonorum constitutorum.'

24. The Latin is, 'per accidiam vanam et per stuporem mentis.' 'Accidia,' more correctly spelled 'acedia' (see Du Cange's Glossarium med. et infimæ Latinæ), is the Greek ἀκηδία, loss of care, and then grief, or melancholy, sometimes arising from ennui. Jerome explains 'acedia' as a disease common among monks.

25. Compare the references to spells and other divinations of that kind in the Hymn of St. Patrick.

26. Lat. 'per scrutationem Majestatis Dei.'

27. Lat. 'per dominici diei operationes et per inlecebr[os]as cogitationes.' So M. Berger corrects the MS. reading.

28. Lat. 'per tristitiam seculi,' a thought evidently borrowed from 2 Cor. vii. 10, where the same expression is used in the Vulgate.

29. Lat. 'et per amorem pecuniae ;' comp. 1 Tim. vi. 10, but the Vulgate has there 'cupiditas' and not 'amor pecuniae.'

30. Lat. 'per commessionem.'

31. Compare the story of St. Patrick having refused the honey offered in sacrifice to false gods, as told in his Confession, at p. 44.

32. Lat. 'sed habeo te sacerdotem summum ad quem confiteor omnia peccata mea.'

33. Lat. 'Id tibi soli, Deus meus.'

34. Quoted exactly from the Vulgate version, Psa. I. 6 (in English version, Psa. II. 4).

35. Lat. 'fletum.'

36. The Lat. is identical with that in Psa. I. 13 in the Vulgate version ; the Psalm in the English version is Psa. II. 11.

37. Compare St. Patrick's references to the devil in the Epistle to Coroticus, pp. 68 and 69.

38. Lat. 'doctrinam meam.'

39. A quotation from the Vulgate version, Psa. cxlii. 10, with the insertion of the words 'tu es doctor meus et,' 'Thou art my teacher and.' The Psalm in the English Bible is Psa. cxliii. 10.
